the mere agreement that interest shall be paid shows forbearance by the creditor. Such considerations throw light upon the intention of the parties but they do not otherwise impose liability upon executors. If the realisation of a testator's estate is a matter of difficulty and if it be thought of benefit to the estate that a creditor should be induced to give time for payment of his debt, there may be every reason why the executor should seek to make an arrangement for time on payment of enhanced interest or on other special terms entirely at the expense of the estate and without risk to himself. The question is whether he has done so: to what has the creditor agreed? This is more safely answered by an Indian Court upon a direct view of the circumstances of the case, the character of the document, if any, and its language fairly taken as a whole, than through the refracting medium of decisions given in another country one hundred years before.

It is maintained, however, that by admission of assets the executor has incurred personal liability without entering into a contract to pay personally or even after entering into a contract under which the creditor's right to payment is conditional upon the sufficiency of the assets. On the terms of the memorandum in the present case, which their Lordships have now construed, it is not possible to suggest that the executors were representing, affirming or admitting that the assets would be sufficient to meet the debt or the sum of Rs. 30,000. On the contrary they gave plain warning that everything would depend upon the future of land values in Bombay.

As English cases have been cited in the High Court and before the Board upon the subject of "admission of assets" their Lordships think right to notice that the English cases require to be interpreted with reference to their setting or background in English Law. In Williams on Executors—the well recognised repository of learning on this subject—the scheme of the English Law and the conditions upon which judgment could be recovered de bonis testatoris or de bonis propriis are described (cf. 12 Ed. 1930, vol. II, pp. 1166, 1240, 1293-6) and it will be sufficient here to refer to them in a summary manner. If an executor was sued for the debt of his testator and had not assets to satisfy the debt, he had to take care to plead plene administravit or plene administravit præter:

otherwise judgment for the plaintiff amounted to a conclusive admission that he had assets to satisfy it. Where this plea was taken the burden was on the plaintiff to show that assets existed or ought to have existed in the hands of the defendant at the date of the writ but this burden might be discharged by proof of some conduct of the defendant amounting to admission of assets. In an administration action such admission entitled the plaintiff to an immediate order for payment without taking the accounts. Indeed the general rule was that admission of assets to one claimant on them was an admission to all: also that an admission of assets can never be retracted unless a case of mistake be clearly established. To charge an executor on his own promise to pay the debt of the testator, in addition to the writing required by the Statute of Frauds, it was necessary to show consideration for the promise. Clearly enough forbearance by the creditor to sue would be good consideration, but there were also decisions to the effect that assets come to the hands of the executor were consideration and that if admission of assets was implied by the promise, the promise was binding.

The Indian system of recovering debts due from a person deceased is different in important respects. In the first place the legal representative who is liable to be sued is not in general an executor or administrator at all but the Muhammadan heir or the Hindu son or a mere intermeddler with the deceased's estate as is now made clear by s. 2 (11) of the Civil P. O. The form of judgment given for the debt against the legal representative is for payment out of the property of the deceased. If no such property remains in the hands of the defendant, execution can be had against his own property on proof that property of the deceased had come into his possession, unless he proves that he has duly applied such property of the deceased. The Court executing the decree will require him to produce accounts as necessary (ss. 50, 52). If the legal representative has wrongly applied part of the assets of the deceased he may be made liable in such proceedings to the creditor: his right being to get credit only for what has been "duly disposed of" or "duly applied." But there is no trace in the Code or, so far as their Lordships are aware, in the decisions of Indian Courts of any doctrine comparable to the English doctrine as to admission of assets. If he has paid a small legacy when the assets are insufficient to meet the debts, the legal representative may fail to get credit for the money wrongly spent but that is all. He will not render himself liable by an admission as though it were an estoppel; though he must like anyone else fulfil his promises and make good his representation (cf. s. 115, Indian Evi. Act). The law of India puts upon a legal representative the full burden of showing that he has duly applied all assets proved to have come to his hands but it has no bias tending to make a legal representative liable to answer with his own property for the debts of the deceased, even if it be true that he knows better than the creditor the position of the deceased's estate. That "assets come to his hands" is consideration for a personal promise to pay the debt of the deceased is a doctrine to which it is difficult to give a meaning under the Indian Contract Act, but (as has already been indicated) forbearance to sue is consideration as to which there is no difficulty provided it is in fact agreed; though the counter-consideration given by an executor is not necessarily an unqualified promise to pay the debt.

Having construed the memorandum of August 10, 1928, as imposing personal liability upon the defendants in respect only of the interest accruing during the ensuing two years with interest thereon as therein provided, their Lordships are of opinion that there should be added to the preliminary decree for sale as it now stands an order that the appellants be at liberty to apply, in the event of the net sale proceeds proving insufficient to satisfy in full the principal sum and interest and costs and interest on costs due on the security of the equitable mortgage of August 10, 1928, for a personal decree against the defendants for the interest or the balance thereof as the case may be due in respect of the period of two years from August 10, 1928, at 6 per centum per annum with interest thereon at the same rate with quarterly rests.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. They do not find it necessary to disturb the orders for costs made by the High Court on appeal. As the appeal succeeds only upon the question of two years' interest and fails as regards the principal and further interest, their Lordships do not think fit to award any costs of this appeal to the appellants.

and direct that the appellants pay to the respondents half their costs of this appeal.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 312 of 1935

PANDRANG ROW AND ABDUR RAHMAN, JJ.

MADURA MUNICIPALITY THROUGH

COMMISSIONER—APPELLANT

versus

K. ALAGIRISAMI NAIDU—

RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 198, 65, 70—S. 196, if refers to contracts expressly forbidden either by persons ratifying them or by law—Option of ratification, exercise of—Contract of sale unenforceable for want of sanction under s. 68, Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920)—Vendee unable to restore goods—Must make compensation—Conflict between s. 65, Contract Act (IX of 1872), and s. 68, Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920)—Suit under s. 65, nature of—Interest on amount of compensation—Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), s. 68—Sanction has to precede every contract exceeding Rs. 1,000—Sanction given after expiry of period for which auction is held—Contract held not valid—S. 68, if draws distinction between executed and executory contracts.

Section 196, Contract Act, refers to contracts which have been entered into by persons on behalf of others without their knowledge or authority but not to contracts which have been expressly forbidden either by those persons who are alleged to have ratified them later or by law. Moreover, an option of ratification could be held to be capable of being exercised within a reasonable time of the act purported to be ratified and not after the expiry of the period for which the option was open. Phillips v. Homfrey (3) and Morrell v. Studd (4), relied on.

The language of s. 65, Contract Act, includes agreements which are destitute of legal effect from their inception. When an agreement is discovered to be unenforceable and not illegal and when a party has not been guilty of any conduct which would disentitle him to come to Court there appears to be no reason why the principle underlying s. 65 should not be given effect to. It would be extremely inequitable to find that when a contract has not been entered into by authorized persons or is found to be unenforceable for want of certain formalities, the advantage gained by a party should not be, when it was not intended to be gratuitous, restored or compensated. The relief which a person asks for under s. 65, Contract Act, has not been forbidden by any law and it cannot be legitimately argued that in trying to secure such a relief he is attempting to do indirectly what he had been forbidden by law to do directly. [p. 783, col. 1.]

So where a contract of sale is found to be unenforceable for want of a sanction under s. 68,

Mad. District Municipalities Act, the vendee who has received the goods but is unable to restore them must make compensation for that under s. 65 or s. 70, Contract Act.

[Case-law relied on.]

Section 65, Contract Act was meant to cover those agreements as well which are discovered to be void from their inception while ss. 96 and 97, U. P. District Municipalities Act or ss. 68 and 69, Mad. District Municipalities Act, 1884, apply to contracts only. The distinction between an agreement and a contract must not be lost sight of. It would thus appear that the provisions of s. 65, Contract Act, were only intended to come into play when an agreement was discovered to be unenforceable at law according to the rules laid down in ss. 96-97, U. P. District Municipalities Act or ss. 68 and 69, Mad. District Municipalities Act. The result is that instead of their being any conflict between the special and general laws we find that the general law would permit a party to get relief when on account of a special law the agreement cannot be considered to be enforceable or in other words characterized as a contract.

In a suit on the basis of a contract, a party is trying to enforce its terms while in a suit under s. 65, a party merely asks for restoration or compensation as the agreement has not matured into a contract and he wants to be placed in the position in which he would have been if no agreement had been entered into.

In the absence of any contract, there is no liability to pay any interest and the same cannot be decreed.

Sub-cl. (1) and sub-cl. (2) of s. 68, Mad. District Municipalities Act cannot be construed to mean that while delegation of the power under sub-cl. (1) might be general in regard to contracts of less than Rs. 1,000 the power of making contracts in regard to transactions exceeding that figure must be specific. Moreover, the necessity to obtain the sanction of the Council for the making of a contract before the same is made implies that the Council must be made aware not only of the matter in regard to which the contract would be entered into but also in regard to its terms and conditions. The sanction has to precede and not follow the making of every contract which exceed Rs. 1,000. Where, therefore, a person has made a bid at a Municipal auction and the contract has been sanctioned by the Municipality after the expiry of the period for which the auction is held, the contract is not valid.

The word "contracts" used in s. 68, Mad. District Municipalities Act covers both "executed" and "executory" contracts.

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge (Principal), Madura, dated March 8, 1935.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastry, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Rajah Ayyer, for the Respondent.

Abdur Rahman, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted on behalf of the Madura Municipality for the recovery of a balance of Rs. 5,220-7-1 alleged to have been due from the defendant in respect of the rights of taking rubbish and night-soil for the years 1928-29 and 1929-30, and for interest calculated at 12 per cent. per annum. It was asserted in the plaint that the defendant was the highest bidder in auctions held by the Sales Committee of the Madura Municipality for both these years, the defendant's bid being Rs. 53,500 for the first year and Rs. 55,500 for the second one. The defendant had, it was admitted, paid the whole of the amount for the first year leaving a balance of Rs. 146-7-0 for interest and the greater portion of the amount due for the second year leaving a balance of Rs. 4,181-7-1 for principal and Rs. 892-9-0 for interest. So far as the first year was concerned, a decree for Rs. 146-7-0 was passed in favour of the Municipality and no appeal has been filed by the defendant against that portion of the decree. As for the balance of Rs. 5,074-0-1, the trial Court held that there was no valid contract between the parties as the mandatory requirements of ss. 68 and 69, District Municipalities Act, were not complied with, but the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the amount if it was found to be due on the principles underlying ss. 65 and 70, Contract Act. The trial Court was not however satisfied on merits that the Municipality had succeeded in establishing its claim. The suit was therefore dismissed in regard to the second year. The Municipality has preferred this appeal in consequence.

The first point which arises for determination relates to the validity of the agreement executed by the defendant and signed by the Chairman of the Municipality and some of its members on April 8, 1929, (Ex. B) after the second auction had been held. It may not be very material in this case but it is rather interesting to find that most of the terms of the printed agreement which the defendant was asked to sign and signed had nothing to do with the sale of rubbish and night-soil. The Municipal clerk who was entrusted with the duty of having the agreement prepared appears to have selected a wrong printed form for the purpose and got it executed by the defendant. The mistake does not seem to have been detected even when the Chairman or the other members were signing. The document thus had led to some confusion but in view of the conclusions to which we have arrived, this mistake has not proved to be material.

The agreement on which reliance was primarily placed in the plaint was not sanctioned by the Municipality until a few months after the expiry of the period for which the second auction was held. It has not been denied and indeed it cannot be disputed that the value or amount of the contract, Ex. B, exceeds Rs. 1,000. The question then is if the Chairman or any other person could enter into this contract without the previous sanction of the Municipality. An examination of the provisions contained in s. 68, Madras District Municipalities Act, would show that the Municipality is authorized to delegate to the Chairman or Committee consisting of two or more members the power of making on its behalf any contract whereof the value or amount does not exceed Rs. 1,000, but when the value or amount of the contract exceeds Rs. 1,000 the sanction of the Municipality has to be taken for the making of the contract before the same is made. This means that no contract of the value or amount exceeding Rs. 1,000 can be entered into or made by any person before the sanction of the Municipality has been obtained. It was contended by Mr. Patanjali Sastri on behalf of the Municipality that it would be unnecessary for the Municipal Council to sanction every individual transaction before it is made and that it would be enough if instead of delegating an authority generally to either the Chairman or to a Committee consisting of two or more members of the Municipal Council as permitted by s. 68, sub-cl. (1), it confers the power of entering into or making a contract in regard to a particular transaction. In other words, the point of distinction according to him between sub-cl. (1) and sub-cl. (2) of the section is that while delegation of the power under sub-cl. (1) might be general in regard to contracts of less than Rs. 1,000 the power of making contracts in regard to transactions exceeding that figure must be specific, although he contends that in neither case would it be necessary for the Municipal Council to know the exact terms on which the contract was to be entered into.

We cannot accept this contention and are of opinion that s. 68 (2) could not be construed in that manner. The omission of any reference in that sub-section to the persons on whom this power could be conferred, if it could be conferred at all, is significant. Moreover, the necessity to obtain the sanction of the Council for the making of a contract before the same is made implies that the Council must be made aware not only of the matter in regard to which the contract would be entered into but also in regard to its terms and conditions. The sanction has to precede and not follow the making of every contract which exceeds Rs. 1,000. This could only be possible if the whole of the proceedings, which culminated in the highest bids made by the defendant, are, before the necessary sanction is obtained, considered to be in the nature of an offer which has to be placed before the Municipality and could mature into a contract after that has been accorded. Once the proposal is sanctioned by the Municipality all that would remain to make the contract enforceable would be to express it in a manner recognized by law. The penalty for entering into a contract which contravenes the provisions of s. 68 is contained in sub-cl. (2) of s. 69 and the result is that any contract entered into in contravention of the provisions of s. 68 (2) would not bind the Municipal Council. It must therefore follow that this contract could not be deemed to have come into existence after the auction was finished; and the final bid given by the defendant must be in the circumstances regarded as a mere offer. This had to be accepted within a reasonable time and could not be held to have remained open even after the period for which it was made. The acceptance of the offer by the Municipal Council in July 1930 was in our opinion misconceived.

It was argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the resolution passed by the Municipality in July 1930 must at all events be taken to have ratified the auction held in April 1929 and must be taken to relate back to the date on which the agreement was signed by the Chairman and other Municipal Councillors. It is hardly necessary to consider the correctness of the argument in regard to the doctrine of relation back as applied to contracts entered into by certain persons on behalf of others without their knowledge or authority particularly when the decision in Bolton v. Lambert (1), on which reliance was placed by Mr. Patanjali Sastri in this connection although not disapproved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Fleming v. Bank of New Zealand (2) at p. 587, was yet not approved of by them, and when we find that s. 68, District Municipalities Act, imposes a disability and thus forbids every person other than the Municipality from entering into or sanctioning a contract which exceeds Rs. 1,000 in value. Section 196, Contract Act, refers to contracts which have been entered into by persons on behalf of others without their knowledge or authority but not to contracts which have been expressly forbidden either by those persons who are alleged to have ratified them later or by law. Moreover, an option of ratification could be held to be capable of being exercised within a reasonable time of the act purported to be ratified as held in Phillips v. Homfrey (3) and Morrell v. Studd (4), and not after the expiry of the period for which the option was open or as in this case three months after the expiry of the period for which the bid was given by the defendant. It is true that a distinction has been made at times between 'executed' and 'executory' contracts (see Leake on Contracts, Edn. 5, pp. 415-416), but s. 68, Mad. District Municipalities Act, which we have now been called upon to construe, draws no such distinction and the word "contracts" used in that section must be held to cover both "executed" and "executory" contracts. We would therefore hold that there was no valid contract between the parties and the view taken by the lower Court on this point was correct.

This is however not enough to dispose of the case. The defendant had admittedly taken the rubbish and night-soil from the Municipal depots for the whole year and has already paid, as stated above a large portion of the amount out of what he had agreed to pay. Should the Municipality be held disentitled then to recover the balance or any other sum which may be found to be due either on the basis of quantum valabat or on the principle embodied in s. 70, Contract Act, on the ground that the contract has been found to be unenforceable? There was a divergence of opinion on this point so far as this Court is concerned and some of the cases had gone to the length of deciding that when an agreement was found to be unenforceable for want of fulfilment of statutory requirement the whole suit should be dismissed: See Raman Chetti v. Municipal Council, Kumbakonam (5) and Ramaswami Chetti v. Municipal Council, Tanjore (6). But a more equitable view has been taken in later cases. See Palaniswami Goundan v. English and Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Societies (7), Arunachala Nadar v. Sriwilliputtur

Municipal Council (8) and Mudura Municipality v. Raman Servai (9). The language of s. 65, Contract Act, has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Harnath Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (10) to include agreements which are destitute of legal effect from their inception, and would therefore cover a case like the present where the agreement in pursuance of which the defendant took delivery of the rubbish and night-soil has been discovered to be of no legal effect from the beginning. There are certain cases which appear to hold that s. 65 would have no application where the void character of the agreement was known to the party: see Ledu Coachman v. Hiralal Bose (11), Nathu Khan v. Sewak Koeri (12). But these cases were decided on the principle that the contracts being either immoral or opposed to public policy were inherently illegal and the parties being in pari delicto the Courts could not render any assistance in enforcing them. The same cannot be said however of cases where agreements are held to be merely unenforceable on account of a failure to comply with certain forms or for want of giving expression to an agreement in the manner prescribed by law. The reason for this difference is obvious. It is impossible for a Court to give effect to or recognize an illegal transaction either by enforcing it or by ordering restitution to a party after it has been wholly or partially carried out. But when an agreement is discovered to be unenforceable and not illegal and when a party has not been guilty of any conduct which would disentitle him to come to Court, there appears to be no reason why the principle underlying s. 65 should not be given effect to.

It is hardly necessary to refer to English cases in this connection. Apparently, the language employed in s. 65 is much wider than the one employed in the Act of Parliament which came up for construction before Lindley, L. J., in Young & Co. v. Mayor and Corporation of Royal Leamington Spa (13) and since the statutory law of India is different from that which prevailed in England, the English decisions could not be of much value in interpreting the Indian statute. While examining ss. 65 and 70, Contract Act, a number of Indian decisions came to our notice and since most of them have taken the view which we ourselves take of these sections it would be supererogatory to do anything more than cite them: see Municipal Committee, Gurjranwala v. Fazl Din (14), Municipal Committee, Lahore v. Miran Baksh (15), Zulaing v. Yamethin District Council (16), Mahammad Ebrahim Molla v. Commissioners for Port of Chittagong (17), and Pallonjee Eduljee & Sons v. Lonavale City Municipality (18). A Full Bench case of the Lucknow Chief Court, Municipal Board, Lucknow v. S. C. Deb (19), takes a different view however. Having given our careful attention to the matter and with deference to the learned Chief Judge who wrote the leading judgment in that case we have not been impressed by the reasons underlying that decision. If the English cases on which reliance was placed are not taken into account, as they cannot be for the reason which has been mentioned above, the decision if analyzed will be found to have been arrived at mainly on two grounds: (1) that in the event of a divergence between a special law and the general law of the country the former has to be preferred and (2) that a man cannot be allowed to do by indirect means what he is forbidden by law to do directly.

The propositions advanced by the learned Chief Judge may be sound but did they have any application to the facts of that case? Is the special law in any way different from what has been described to be the general law of the country? According to the learned Chief Judge there is a conflict between the general law of the country as laid down in s. 65, Contract Act and the so-called special law in s. 97, U. P.

District Municipalities Act. We do not agree with this statement. The special law in the U. P. Municipalities Act is almost the same except in regard to certain minor details as contained in ss. 68 and 69, Mad. District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884) and defines how certain contracts between the municipalities and private individuals have to be made or expressed in order to be binding. Section 65, Contract Act, on the other hand only provides for the devolution of an obligation on a person who has received some advantage under an agreement which has been discovered to be void or unenforceable from the very beginning. The sections of the two Acts were framed by Legislatures with entirely different objects and one cannot be said to be in conflict with the other. Section 65, Contract Act, was meant to cover those agreements as well which are discovered to be void from their inception while ss. 96 and 97, U. P. District Municipalities Act or ss. 68 and 69, Mad. District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884), apply to contracts only. The distinction between an agreement and a contract must not be lost sight of. It would thus appear that the provisions of s. 65, Contract Act, were only intended to come into play when an agreement was discovered to be unenforceable at law according to the rules laid down in ss. 96-97, U. P. District Municipalities Act or ss. 68 and 69, Mad. District Municipalities Act. The result is that instead of there being any conflict between the special and general laws we find that the general law would permit a party to get relief when on account of a special law the agreement cannot be considered to be enforceable or in other words characterized as a contract.

So far as the second ground for the decision is concerned, the underlying assumption appears to be that a party in asking for restoration or compensation under s. 65, Contract Act, on account of the agreement having been denied the status of a contract, is nonetheless enforcing the same. This is not correct. In a suit on the basis of a contract, a party is trying to enforce its terms while in a suit under s. 65, a party merely asks for restoration or compensation as the agreement has not matured into a contract and he wants to be placed in the position in which he would have been if no agreement had been entered into. Moreover, a perusal of these sections in the District Municipalities Act would show that the Municipalities or their officers and members were not for-bidden to enter into contracts. What they appear to lay down is that if a certain contract is entered into either by a person not mentioned in these sections or without the formalities regarded by them to be indispensable it would not be binding on the Board or the Municipality. First of all the rule only safeguards the interests of the Municipalities and does not specifically lay down that the contracts would not be enforceable at their instance. But even if the doctrine of mutuality is held to be applicable the only inference would be that the contracts could not be enforced by either party. It cannot be legitimately contended that in asking for a relief under s. 65, Contract Act, they are doing the same thing indirectly as was forbidden by the Municipalities Act. It would be extremely inequitable to find that when a contract has not been entered into by authorized persons or is found to be unenforceable for want of certain formalities, the advantage gained by a party should not be, when it was not intended to be gratuitous, restored or compensated. The Courts in India are and have been administering both law and equity and there is no reason why this equitable relief, which since the passing of Judicature Acts is grantable even by the Courts in England, should not be grantable here. The relief which a person asks for under s. 65, Contract Act, has not been forbidden by any law and it cannot be legitimately argued that in trying to secure such a relief he is attempting to do indirectly what he had been forbidden by law to do directly. By asking for an equitable relief he cannot be said to have got round the law. Indeed he ought to be taken to have admitted that the law does not permit such agreements to be enforced and it is only then that he asks the Courts to exercise its equitable jurisdiction in restoring the parties to the position in which they were before these infructuous agreements came into existence. We will be by holding s. 65, Contract Act, to be applicable, giving effect to both the letter and the spirit of the law.

The same conclusion would be arrived at if we hold that the contracts did not exist in the eye of law. In the absence of such a contract s. 70, Contract Act could well be applied. It cannot be said that there was anything unlawful in permitting the defendant to remove the rubbish or night-soil. It was certainly not intended to be done gratuitously and the benefit was on the defendant's own showing enjoyed by him. We must therefore hold that as the defendant is unable to restore the rubbish and the night-soil which he had taken from the Municipal depots he must make compensation for it to the plaintiff Municipality. The next point for determination is the amount of compensation to which the plaintiff is entitled under ss. 65 and 70, Contract Act. The defendant had agreed to purchase the rubbish and night-soil for the year 1928-29 for a sum of Rs. 53,500. He offered to purchase the same for the year 1929-30 for a sum of Rs. 55,500. The increase in the offer was not apparently due to any increase in the market rates but in all probability to the fact that the Municipality had invited tenders for the removal of rubbish and night-soil by motor lorries instead of by Municipal carts: see Exs. J and J-1. A remark in Ex. Q that the depot for collections would be removed to the new site near Mathukattinam tank, Vandiyur limits leads us to think that this was also one of the factors which had induced the defendant to make a higher bid in the auction. The contract for the removal of rubbish and night-soil by motor lorries was given after a few months and the depots were not shifted to the new site during the whole of the period in which he removed them. If the defendant had not been convinced of these facts it is improbable that he would have exceeded the bid which he had given in the previous year. On account of the delay on the part of the Municipality in carrying out these changes we are inclined to hold that the proper measure of compensation would be the amount which the defendant had agreed to pay for the previous year particularly when the defendant has admitted in his statement as a witness that the prices of the rubbish and night-soil had not fallen during the year 1929-30. The defendant has not produced all the accounts which were in his possession and in the absence of the original chits in which the accounts were kept we are not prepared to believe that the accounts produced by him relate to all the supplies which were made to him from various depots. We must therefore hold that he was liable to pay Rs. 53,500 as compensation to the Municipality. Having paid Rs. 51,315-8-11, he is liable to pay balance Rs. 2,181-7-1. In the absence of any contract, there is no liability to pay any interest and the same cannot be decreed. We would therefore pass a decree for Rs. 2,181-7-1 in favour of the Municipality. As the parties have partly succeeded and partly failed the proper order in the circumstances appears to be that they should bear their own costs both here and in the Court below.

Before parting with this case we must however advert to the illegible handwriting in which the evidence was recorded by the learned Subordinate Judge. We had occasion to refer to it during the course of the argument to verify the printed statements and we found it impossible to read them or to decipher as to what had been written by him. It may not be possible to insist on the handwriting being good but it must be legible. It is a surprise to us how the record of evidence which is almost indecipherable was at all printed. We hope that the learned Subordinate Judge would take steps in future to see that the statements recorded by him are not difficult to read.

N.-D.

Order accordingly.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), s. 9—Sale of occupancy holding in execution of rent decree—If free from encumbrance.

An absolute occupancy field sold in execution of a rent decree under s. 9, C. P. Ten. Act is not sold free from encumbrances. What is sold in execution of the rent decree is the interest of the judgment-debtor and where he has mortgaged the holding he holds it subject to the mortgage which he has created. The ordinary principle is that a purchaser cannot get a better title than that possessed by his vendor. 99 Ind. Cas. 415 (1) and S. A. No. 339 of 1934, relied on.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated September 15, 1934.

R. B. M. B. Kinkhede and Mr. M. D. Khandekar, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. L. Halve, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Pollock, J.—On February 13, 1929 defendant No. 2 mortgaged his absolute occupancy field to the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,000. On November 4, 1930 the landlord obtained a decree for Rs. 107-3-9 in cluding costs against defendant No. 2 for arrears of rent. The field was sold in execution of this decree and purchased by defendant Nos. 1 and 3 for Rs. 510 on November 28, 1931.

The plaintiffs have now sued to enforce their mortgage, and the main question in dispute is whether the field was sold free from encumbrances. Section 9 (1) of the C. P. Ten. Act provides that the rent of a holding of an absolute occupancy tenant shall be a first charge thereon and that such holding shall be liable to sale for the satisfaction of such charge in execution of a decree for rent against the tenant, and sub-s. (3) provides that any person claiming an interest in the holding may deposit in the Court executing a decree for rent on account of such holding the amount due under such decree and such deposit shall be credited in satisfaction of such decree. The plaintiffs, therefore, as mortgagees, could have deposited the amount due under the rent decree and thus have saved the property from being sold in execution. They did not do so and it is now contended that they cannot enforce their mortgage as the property was sold free from encumbrances at the execution sale. In support of this contention we have been referred to the opinion of Sir B. K. Bose which is printed at p. 191 of Barway's Law of Tenancy. On the other hand there is the decision of Kinkhede, A. J. C., in Asaram v. Kanchedilal (1) and of Gruer, J., in Ganba v. Ganpatsao, Second Appeal No. 339 of 1934 that an absolute occupancy field which has been sold in execution of a rent decree is not sold free from encumbrances. This view is accepted in Barway's Law of Tenancy, in Brahmarakshas's C. P. Ten. Act, and impliedly in Kathalay's Land Revenue Act at p. 531. What was sold in execution of the rent decree was the interest of the judgment-debtor and he held the holding subject to the mortgage which he had created. The ordinary principle is that a purchaser cannot get a better title than that possessed by his vendor, and, in the absence of any specific provision, I think that it must be held that the holding was not sold free from encumbrances. In s. 138 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act of 1917 it is specifically provided that any estate, mahal, share or land sold for arrears of land revenue due in respect thereof shall be sold free from encumbrances, but there is no such provision in s. 9 of the C. P. Ten. Act, which was passed only three years later. If the legislature had intended that an absolute occupancy holding sold in execution of a rent decree should be sold free from encumbrances, it would have been very easy for it to say so and, in the absence of such provision, I think that it must be held that it is not sold free from encumbrances.

The appellants took the objection that the mortgage deed had not been properly attested. Punjaji (P. W. No. 1) one of the attesting witnesses, said that the executant signed in their presence and that then he and the other attesting witness then attested it. It is clearly implied that the attesting witnesses attested in the presence of the executant, and this point was apparently not argued in the lower Appellate Court, nor does it form a ground of appeal in this Court. I think that there is no substance in it.

The last point taken is one of interest. The consideration for the mortgage was Rs. 1,000, to which Rs. 250 was added as prospective interest, and the mortgagor agreed to repay the amount in 10 annual instalments of Rs. 125. Defaulted instalments were to carry interest at 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the deed until payment of the entire amount and there was an agreement that if there was default in paying two instalments the mortgagor would pay the entire amount together with interest in a lump. There was no provision for the payment of any interest after the entire amount had become exigible. The agreement to pay interest on any defaulted instalment from the date of the deed was clearly a penalty, and the mortgagees are therefore entitled only to such interest as we think reasonable. From January 1, 1932 they are not entitled to interest exceeding 10 per cent. per annum by reason of the C. P. Reduction of Interest Act, 1936. I think that reasonable interest in this case would be simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum on Rs. 1,000 from the date of the mortgage until December 31, 1931, and simple interest at 10 per cent. per annum on Rs. 1,000 from January 1, 1932 until the new dies datus which I fix as January 18, 1938. There will therefore be a preliminary decree for sale in the usual form for Rs. 1,000 principal together with interest at the above rates and costs. If defendants Nos. 1 and 3 redeem, they will be given credit for Rs. 107-3-9 which was the amount of the rent decree; I express no opinion on the correctness of this decision, but the decision was not challenged in appeal. As the appeal has almost entirely failed, I think that the plaintiffs should be allowed their costs in full throughout and Counsel's fee of Rs. 50 in this Court.

Digby, J.—I agree and would add a few observations. Under the Ten. Act of 1893 it was provided in s. 43 that the rent of the holding of an absolute occupancy tenant should be the first charge on that holding which should, subject to the other provisions of that Act, be liable to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of the rent thereof. It was held in Bhagwandass v. Tarachand (2) that the word 'charge' had much the same meaning as the same word used in s. 100 of the T. P. Act. It was decided that it was open to a landlord to institute a suit for the sale of the property charged in which case all persons having an interest in the said property must be joined as parties and that if a decree for sale were obtained and the holding sold in pursuance of that decree then the purchaser would undoubtedly take the holding free from all incumbrances. Under s. 9 of the Act now in force a simplified procedure is allowed. It is provided that notwithstanding anything contained in s. 100 of the T. P. Act, 1882, and O. XXXIV of the First Schedule of the Civil P. O., 1908, such holding shall be liable to sale for the satisfaction of the charge for rent in execution of a decree for rent against the tenant whether such decree orders such sale or not; while sub-s. (3) provides that any person claiming an interest in the holding may deposit in the Court executing a decree for rent the amount due under such decree.

It is no doubt arguable that in this simplified procedure the landlord is entitled to put to sale the holding over which he has a charge under s. 9, and not merely an equity of redemption in that holding. It is arguable that the redemption of the charge must be made by the mortgagee at the time under s. 9 (3), and that this is one of the cases where the sole remedy of the mortgagee who does not redeem will be that indicated by s. 73 of the T. P. Act. Nevertheless, it is a cardinal principle that nobody should be prejudiced by proceedings to which he is not a party.

(2) 14 O P L R 17, (19).

If then the mortgagee's right does not disappear in proceedings to enforce the charge against him it will subsist. If s. 9 permits of such a construction, it should be adopted. I think that although s. 9, as amended, provides a convenient procedure by which the landlord can satisfy his charge by sale of the property without having to bring a charge suit, the provisions of s. 9 do not involve the result that the mortgagee will be deprived of his rights under the mortgage by proceedings to which he is not a party. The point is not free from difficulty, and the opinion of Sir. B. K. Bose is obviously founded on the position that the landlord's charge exists over the holding, over the tenure which he or his predecessors created, and that if O. XXXIV of the Civil P. O., does not apply the landlord enforcing the charge does not have to make the mortgagee, who is really in the position of a subsequent mortgagee (his mortgage being postponed to the first charge) a party. But I consider that the view previously taken by Gruer, J., and now by my learned brother is the right view. I would also observe that if the contrary view were adopted there would be risk of fraud, by which mortgages could be rendered infructuous by decrees for arrears obtained behind the back of the mortgagee. I entirely agree that it would have been very easy for the Legislature to have stated clearly that the property was to be sold free from incumbrance if that was the intention of the Legislature.

Fraud—Proof of—Suspicion not enough.

The party alleging fraud is bound to establish it by cogent evidence and suspicion cannot be accepted as proof. Unless, therefore, the proved circumstances are incompatible with the hypothesis of the person charged with fraud having acted in good faith, they cannot be accepted as affording sufficient proof of fraud. [p. 789, col. 1.]

Sir Herbert Cunliffe K. C. and Mr. W. Wallach, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. P. Eddy K. C. and Dingle Foot, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton.—This appeal is from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, dated September 1, 1933, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge at Dehra Dun dated February 4, 1931 and, granted a decree to the plaintiff-respondent for a sum of Rs. 13,100 with interest at 6 per cent. from August 31, 1923.

The suit arises out of the misdeeds of Beltie Shah Gilani, who was the promoter and Managing Agent and Managing Director of the Dehra Dun-Mussoorie Electric Tramway, which was registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, on August 23, 1921, and was ordered to be wound up by the High Court on March 26, 1926. N. P. Asthani and Bhagwati Shanker being appointed the Official Liquidators. On investigation, it was found that large sums of the Company's monies had been misappropriated by Beltie Shah.

Certain contracts with the Company were made by Lala Raghmal, who carried on business as a contractor under the name of Madho Ram-Hadreo Dass at Calcutta and under the name of Madho-Ram-Budh Sing in Delhi. He was also a large share-holder in the Company. Raghmal died in September 1926, and the appellants Nos. 1 to 5 (appellant No. 3 being since deceased) are his legal representatives. Appellant No. 7 is the Official Receiver of the Calcutta High Court, who was appointed Receiver of the estate of Raghmal by an order of that Court dated June 16 1931. Appellant No. 6, Lala Mela Ram, was in the service of Raghmal and was the manager of his Delhi business.

On June 25, 1929, the Company through its Official Liquidators instituted the present suit claiming a sum of Rs. 39,750 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, i. e., Rs. 30,240-14-9, and future and pendente lite interest, on the ground of fraudulent conspiracy of Raghmal and his authorised agent, Mela Ram, with Beltie Shah in the misappropriation of the sum of Rs. 39,750 of the Company's monies.

Historically, it should be mentioned that in 1927 the Liquidators had taken misfeasance proceedings under s. 235 of the Indian Companies Act against Beltie Shah, which resulted in an order dated April 3, 1927, against Beltie Shah for sums amounting to over three lakhs, which included the sum of Rs. 39,750 here in question. Beltie Shah was also criminally prosecuted and was sentenced to imprisonment for a period of five years. In March 1928, the Liquidators applied under s. 186 of the Indian Companies Act, for recovery from Raghmal of two sums of money, of which one was the amount here in dispute, but the application failed. The Liquidators also took misfeasance proceedings against the Company's auditors, Mukerji, J., on February 26, 1929, decreed the Official Liquidators' application and held the auditors liable to pay Rs. 89,812-8-0, including the amount here in dispute. On appeal, the High Court affirmed, with this modification :

"Though we affirm the order of the learned Judge that the auditors are to compensate the Company, to the extent of Rs. 39,750 we direct that execution for this amount shall be stayed until further order. The Liquidators are to be at liberty to make an application to discharge the stay order hereby granted in respect of this sum of Rs. 39,750 when the contest between themselves and the contractors has been finally decided (a) adversely to the Liquidators, or (b) in favour of the Liquidators, and they, after taking all reasonable steps to recover the amount, have failed wholly or in part to do so. If the Liquidators recover a portion of the Rs. 39,750 from the contractors, they should then apply to the Court giving credit to the auditors for that amount and seeking execution as to the balance only."

The auditors obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, but the appeal was compromised by the auditors paying Rs. 18,500 to the Liquidators in full and final discharge of the said decree. As will be seen, their Lordships do not consider these various proceedings material to the only issue which they find it necessary to consider.

Their Lordships do not find it necessary to review the evidence in detail, as that has been fully and well done by the Subordinate Judge.

It is established that the various sums making up the amount of Rs. 39,750 were misappropriated by Beltie Shah on the following dates, Rs.

April 11, 1922	...	...	8,750
April 24, 1922	...	...	6,000
August 18, 1922	...	...	2,000
October 26, 1922	...	...	5,000
January 15, 1923	...	...	12,000
March 29, 1923	...	...	6,000
			39,750

Both the Courts below have found that Mela Ram was not a party to the original misappropriations, and that he was not aware of them at least until the 18th or August 19

1923, when he had a meeting with Beltie Shah at Dehra Dun and signed at least two of the receipts for these sums. The plaintiff's case of an original conspiracy for the misappropriation of these sums has gone; further no suggestion is now made that Raghunath was personally a party to any fraud, but his estate is sought to be made liable for the alleged fraud of Mela Ram, his employee.

The alternative case, on which the respondent succeeded in the High Court, was stated by Counsel before this Board as follows,—that Mela Ram and Beltie Shah were jointly concerned in July and August 1923, in manufacturing false receipts fraudulently, to deceive the Company's auditors, thereby enabling Beltie Shah to conceal his misappropriation of the Company's moneys to the amount of Rs. 39,750; that they were fraudulently conspiring to that end, in order to defraud the Company; that the auditors were deceived, and that Beltie Shah was thereby enabled to conceal the misappropriations until December, 1926, when the Liquidators first became aware of the misappropriations; and that the Company was entitled to recover the damages flowing from that concealment from Mela Ram and also from the estate of Raghunath.

The Subordinate Judge believed the evidence of Mela Ram, whom he saw, and, in particular, accepted Mela Ram's evidence as to the explanations given to him by Beltie Shah which induced him to sign the receipts without any suspicion. The High Court, while recognising the respect with which they were bound to regard the views of the Judge who saw the witness as to his credibility, held that they were constrained by the other evidence, particularly the documentary evidence, to reject the explanations of Mela Ram, and to hold that he was a party to the fraud practised on the Company's auditors. They rejected certain other defences maintained by the present appellants as to limitation, the liability of Raghunath's estate after his death, and the scope of Mela Ram's authority, and, after a remand to ascertain the damages, they made a decree in the respondent's favour for Rs. 13,100 as already mentioned.

The crucial question in the appeal is whether the learned Judges of the High Court were justified in declining to accept Mela Ram's evidence. Their Lordships are prepared to accept the test laid down by Niamat-ullah J., in his judgment. After stating that the party alleging fraud is bound to establish it by cogent evidence and that suspicion cannot be accepted as proof, the learned Judge says:—

"Unless, therefore, the proved circumstances are incompatible with the hypothesis of the person charged with fraud having acted in good faith, they cannot be accepted as affording sufficient proof of fraud. I have approached the case with this point of view, and have been driven to the conclusion that the evidence, as a whole, excludes all hypothesis of good faith on the part of Mela Ram in granting the three receipts to Beltie Shah Gilani."

Similarly, Allsop J. says:—

"Considering all the circumstances I cannot believe that Lala Mela Ram issued these receipts in good faith. I am convinced that he issued them at the request of Beltie Shah in order to deceive the auditors and prevent them from entering upon an enquiry and that it was agreed that the liability should be cancelled as soon as the audit was over and the necessity for it ceased to exist."

It will, therefore, be right to examine the reasons given by the learned Judges for their conclusion.

First, as to the suggestion that the third receipt, for Rs. 6,000, was not signed by Mela Ram at the same time as the other two, as stated by him, but was signed after his receipt of the letter dated the August 11, of which there is a copy in the press copy book, their Lordships are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the despatch of this letter had not been proved. Allsop J., lays no stress on this point, but Niamat-ullah J., says that P. W. Lahiri had stated that the letter was sent. This is not so, as Lahiri says that he had nothing to do with the letter when it was sent, and "it may be possible that notwithstanding that the letter of August 11, 1923, was not cancelled it was not despatched at all." The evidence clearly shows that the Company's books are very far from being reliable, and that they were frequently manipulated for Beltie Shah's purposes. The Subordinate Judge was entitled to take the view that this letter was part of Beltie Shah's devices to deceive the auditors.

Allsop J., relies on the previous relations of Beltie Shah and Mela Ram as justifying the conclusion that Mela Ram had at least some reason for thinking that Beltie Shah was not the absolutely honest and upright business man that he might appear to be to others who had only a casual knowledge of his affairs. This conclusion is based on the transactions relative to Raghunath's application for 10,000 ordinary shares of Rs. 10 each and 250 preference shares of Rs. 100 each dated the August 12, 1922, and the payment of the amount due on allotment of the shares by endorsement back to the Company of the cheque for Rs. 31,250 in Raghmal's favour, part of the Rs. 35,000 advanced to Raghmal on contracts to be placed by him. Their Lordships are unable to agree that any dishonesty is necessarily to be inferred in these transactions. In the first place, Raghmal, against whom there is no reflection, was himself concerned in the application for shares, which is signed by him. Moreover the letter of September 13, 1922. Ex. C, which embodies the transaction, was sent to Calcutta and not to Delhi, and there is nothing wrong ex facie of the transaction. Similarly, the payment of commission on the shares to Mela Ram, which he states he handed over to Raghmal, is not of such an unusual character as necessarily to justify suspicion of Beltie Shah's honesty. The transactions are recorded in the books of the Company. Counsel for the respondent, who did not press this point, made a further suggestion, viz., that the agreement of February 23, 1922, between the Company and Madho Ram-Hardeo Das was so unusual and unheard-of that it was clearly a sham and that there was all the time a secret scheme between Beltie Shah and Mela Ram for despoiling of the Company. There is no evidence to support this suggestion, every probability is against it, and, in fact, though the Company's engineers, Tata Engineering Company Ltd., at first disapproved of the agreement, they ultimately accepted it. It should be remembered that the misappropriations that Beltie Shah committed in respect of the matters in which Mela Ram was concerned was a small part of his total misappropriations and that every probability was against his making a confidant of Mela Ram, who was only an employee.

There remains the question whether the statement of Mela Ram as to the explanations given to him by Beltie Shah, which induced him to sign the receipts is such as cannot be accepted as true, and not such as may be true or may merely give rise to suspicion as to its untruth.

In the first place, their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Judges have placed too much stress on the terms of the receipts; it is true that, correctly read, they appear to acknowledge cash payments direct to Mela Ram's firm, but the word "cash" does not appear in them, and it is made clear by the evidence that they were regarded not only by Mela Ram but also by Lahiri as covering payments on the firm's account to the manufacturers in England.

In the next place, the evidence of the respondent's own witness, Lahiri, the accountant of the Company, who had knowledge of the books and of the auditors' requirements, appears to negative the validity of the conclusion of the High Court. Lahiri states:

"I understood at the time that some materials had been purchased and were awaiting delivery. I understood so on the assurance given by Beltie Shah. At that time (the end of August, 1923), I had no reason to suspect the accuracy of the assurance held out by Beltie Shah. At the time of making this reverse entry Mr. Beltie Shah explained to me that this amount had not been paid to Madho Ram-Hardeo Das and Madho Ram-Budh Singh, but that it had been paid directly to the manufacturers on behalf of Madho Ram-Hardeo Das and Madho Ram-Budh Singh. I had no reason to doubt the accuracy of the assurance held out by Mr. Beltie Shah, because that was the usual course of business between the Company and Lala Raghmal. In other words according to the practice money could be sent either to the manufacturers direct or through Lala Raghmal. I never had any discussions concerning the disputed items either Lala Mela Ram or with Lala Raghmal. From the statement made by Mela Ram to the Liquidator I am aware that Beltie Shah got receipts about these items from Mela Ram on holding out to him the same assurance that he had held out to me."

Bearing in mind the personality of Beltie Shah and his dominating position in the Company's affairs, their Lordships are unable to agree with the opinion of the learned Judges that Mela Ram's statement cannot be accepted. It is to be remembered that Mela Ram was undoubtedly ill at this time, and, further, his lack of business-like methods in not insisting on immediate proof that the payments on account had been made, is by no means necessarily indicative of fraud. Their Lordships would also add that, in their opinion, the conduct of Mela Ram subsequent to the granting of the receipts is—if anything—more consistent with innocence than with fraud. The reverse entries which Mela Ram obtained would be likely to draw the attention not only of the director, but also of the auditors to the matter. Lastly, their Lordships see no reason for doubting Mela Ram's statement that he knew nothing about the audit until about the middle of August. There was no apparent reason why Mela Ram must be taken to have known about the Company's auditing arrangements, or that the receipts were required for that purpose, as the High Court hold.

Their Lordships are accordingly unable to regard as adequate the reasons given by the High Court in justification of their reversal of the finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the evidence of Mela Ram. It follows that the respondent's case of fraud has failed and the suit must be dismissed. It is therefore unnecessary to hear the parties on the remaining defences to the action, which were held over at the hearing of the appeal, pending the decision of the issue of fraud.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the High Court should be set aside, and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored. The appellants will have their costs of this appeal, and also their costs in the High Court.

Miscellaneous Appeal No 139 of 1937

GRILLE AND NIYOGI, JJ.
AZHAR HUSAIN—DECREE-HOLDER—

APPELLANT

versus

MOHAMMAD SHIBLI AND OTHERS

—PLAINTIFF—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 58—"Representatives," in s. 47, scope of—Transferees from decree-holder or judgment-debtor, if included—Property attached in execution of decree obtained against legal representatives of deceased—Question, whether property forms part of assets of deceased raised by legal representatives or their transferees—Whether falls under s. 47 or O. XXI, r. 58—Proceedings under s. 47 between parties to suit—Auction-purchaser, if necessary party.

The term 'representatives' occurring in s. 47, Civil P. C., includes not only legal representatives in the sense of heirs, executors or administrators but also representatives-in-interest, that is, any transferee of the decree-holder's interest or any transferee of the judgment-debtor's interest who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree. Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (1), 25 Ind. Cas. 118 (2) and 51 Ind. Cas. 633 (3), relied on. [p. 792, col. 2.]

Where therefore, a decree is obtained against legal representatives of the deceased in respect of a debt charged against the assets of the deceased and in execution of that decree the assets of the deceased are attached, the question whether the properties attached are assets of the deceased or belong to the legal representatives themselves, raised by the legal representatives or their transferees who are bound by the decree, is a question relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and must be determined in execution and not by a separate suit. It is only when the judgment-debtor claims to represent the interest of a third party in whom the property is vested that the case would fall outside the purview of s. 47. In such a case as this what the judgment-debtor says is that although the property is vested in him it is so vested not beneficially but as trustee or executor for someone else. It is clear that in such a case the real objecting party is one who is a stranger to the suit and the objection having been made on his account his claim must be regarded as that of a third party and dealt with under O. XXI, r. 58.

[Case-law referred to.]

[Distinction between the position of a legal representative of a deceased person and of a shebait of a deity pointed out.]

In a proceeding arising under s. 47, Civil P. C., between the parties to the suit the auction-purchaser is not a necessary party. Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the Second Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated March 18, 1937.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. B. Pendharkar, for Respondent No. 1.

Order.—This is a decree-holder's appeal from an order passed by the second Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore, in Civil Appeal No. 29-B of 1936 on March 18, 1937.

In Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1934, one Mst. Tahirabi obtained a decree for Rs. 3,000 on account of her dower debt against the assets of the deceased Syed Ahmad Hussein in the hands of Altaf Hussain and Mst. Hira, respondents Nos. 2 and 3. The appellant Azhar Hussain is the legal representative of Mst. Tahirabi. In execution of that decree two houses Nos. 76 and 77 were attached and one of them was auctioned while the attachment of the other remained in force. The respondent No. 1 Muhammad Shibli lodged an objection to the attachment on the allegation that neither of the two houses attached formed part of the estate of Syed Ahmad Hussein but that both the houses belonged to Ahmad Hussein's brother Imdad Hussein and that he orally gifted them to Mst. Hira and Altaf Hussein's daughter who in their turn sold the houses to Muhammad Shibli on December 7, 1935, after the date of the decree in Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1934 and the attachment. It is pertinent to state that the decree in Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1934 was passed on August 27, 1934, and that the houses had been already attached before judgment. In his objection Muhammad Shibli also contended that there was no valid attachment of the houses. The objection was dismissed in the original Court on the ground that the purchase of the house by the objector was contrary to the attachment and that it was void under s. 64 of the Civil P. O. It thus rejected the objection on a preliminary point and did not enter into the merits of the case. On appeal by Muhammad Shibli, the objector, it was held that the objection should have been treated as falling under s. 47 of the Civil P. O., and not under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. O., and the case was remanded to the executing Court for enquiry into its merits.

This appeal is preferred by the decree-holder. It is contended on his behalf that the proceeding arising out of the objection fell to be governed by O. XXI, r. 58 and not by s. 47 and that the appeal was incompetent. It is also urged that the non-joinder of the auction purchaser was fatal to the appeal and that there was no necessity for remanding the case as the fact of attachment was admitted by the objector in the course of proceedings in the Court of the first instance.

It is conceded in this Court on behalf of the objector that the attachment was in fact made and that it was also valid; but that does not conclude the case since if it is held that the proceeding fell under s. 47 and not under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. O., the remand would be inevitable as there was no enquiry into the merits of the objection.

The main point in this appeal is whether s. 47 or O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. O. applies. Section 47 which corresponds to s. 244 of the Act of 1882 and s. 11 of the Code of 1861 runs as follows:

"All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit."

The section lays down two conditions, (1) that the questions which arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives, and (2) that they should relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. A party means a person who is either plaintiff or defendant, that is a person who seeks a remedy or a person against whom a remedy is sought. Normally a plaintiff or defendant comes to Court on his own account, but in some cases either of the parties may not sue or be sued on their own account but on account of some third person. Their capacity in the suit may not be that of the principals but that of representatives.

This circumstance gives rise to important legal consequences so far as the rights and liabilities of the parties are concerned. In suits to recover a simple money debt the plaintiff has a remedy against both the person and property of his debtor but in some suits there are defendants who cannot, save in exceptional circumstances, be made personally liable such as trustees, executors, receivers of insolvent estates, principal officers of corporation, *shebait*s of Hindu idols, mohanth of math or a guardian of a minor or legal representatives of a deceased person. They are not primary parties, that is to say, those who are liable on their own account but are representative parties who are liable on account of those whom they represent. Even among such representative parties there are some, for example, *shebait*s and *mohanth*s and guardians who are nominal, and others such as trustees, receivers and legal representatives of a deceased person or real parties. This distinction must be borne in mind before entering on the discussion on the point raised here. The term 'representatives' occurring in s. 47 includes not only legal representatives in the sense of heirs, executors or administrators but also representatives-in-interest, that is any transferee of the decree-holder's interest or any transferee of the judgment-debtor's interest who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree: see Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (1), Tara Prasanna Bose v. Nilmoni Khan (2) and Gauri Dutt v. D. K. Dowing (3). It is therefore clear that Altaf Hussein and Mst. Hira who were sued as being in possession of the assets of Syed Ahmad Hussein were parties to the suit and that Muhammad Shibli the objector who claimed interest in the two houses by virtue of a sale deed, dated December 7, 1935 is their representative.

The next question is whether the claim made by him that the attached properties were not the assets of Ahmad Hussein but of Altaf Hussein and Mst. Hira involved a question relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. On this point there is a mass of authority. In Seth Chand Mal v. Durga Dei (4) it was held that the question whether certain property belongs to the assets of the deceased or not are questions which must be determined in execution and not by a separate suit. It was pointed out that there was no distinction in this respect between the position of legal representatives added to the suit before and those added after the decree. It is only when the judgment-debtor claims to represent the interest of a third party in whom the property is vested that the case would fall outside the purview of s. 47. In such a case as this what the judgment debtor says is that although the property is vested in him it is so vested not beneficially but as trustee or executor for someone else. It is clear that in such a case the real objecting party is one who is a stranger to the suit and the objection having been made on his account his claim must be regarded as that of a third party and dealt with under O. XXI, r. 58. This case was followed in Beni Prasad Kunwar v. Lukhna Kunwar (5), Kali Charan v. Jewat Dube (6) and Dulla v. Shib Lal (7). The same view was taken in Punchanin Bundopadhy v. Rabia Bibi (8) which was followed in Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani (9), Narayan Shridhar v. Pandurang Bapuji (10), Dinbai v. Bamanishaji (11), V. T. Arunachellam Chetty v. Maung San Ngwe (12), Ma Shwe Mra Pru v. Maung Ba On (13), Ishar Das v. Parma Nand (14), Vengapayyan v. Karimpanakal Parvati (15) and Rajah of Kärñethnagar v. Venkata Reddi (16). In all these cases the judgment-debtor or his representative asserted his title to the property and claimed in his own right. On the other hand there are cases in which the objection was made by the judgment-debtors not in their own right but in that of a third party. It was held consistently that the proceeding was governed not by s. 47 but by O. XXI, r. 58: see Murigeya v.

Hayat Saheb (17), Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levvai Marakayar (18) and Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara (19). In the first mentioned case Ranade, J., pointed out that when a legal representative objects on the ground that it is trust property a different set of issues arises which has no relation to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree as between the parties to the suit. It is clear that in such cases the legal representatives really assert a jus tertii, that is rights of persons who are not parties to the decree or their representatives. In Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara (19) the legal representative asserted that he was in possession as a shebait of a deity to whom the properties have been dedicated and it was held that the objection fell under by s. 278 of the Code of 1882 which corresponds to O. XXI, r. 58.

The learned Counsel for the appellant relied strongly on Upendra Nath Kalamuri v. Kusum Kumari Dasi (20) as an authority supporting his contention. In that case a decree for money had been passed against a person in his capacity as a shebait of a deity and he objected to the attachment on the ground that he was in possession of it not as a shebait of the deity but in his own right. It was held that the case did not fall within the scope of s. 47 of the Civil P. O., of 1908. It must be observed that the learned Judges who decided the case followed Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara (19) and distinguished Punchanin Bundopadhy v. Rabia Bibi (8). The ratio decidendi was that the judgment-debtor having set up jus tertii, that is the right of a third party the case was not one between the parties to the suit so as to attract s. 47, Civil P. O. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the principle of this decision should be extended to the present case for the reason that the judgment-debtors who are legal representatives in the present case are only representative parties in the same way as the shebait in the cited case was and that in that sense they should not be regarded as being parties to the suit. This argument ignores the fundamental distinction between the position of a legal representative of a deceased person and that of a shebait of a deity. A legal representative is not a mere figurehead as the shebait is. Legal representatives are persons to whom the rights and obligations of the deceased are transmitted. They are real parties to the suit although they represent the rights and liabilities of a deceased person. A shebait on the other hand is a nominal party who stands in Court as a physical representative of an ideal person, namely, the idol, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (21). While a dead person whose rights and liabilities in regard to his assets are represented by his legal representatives cannot conceivably be regarded as a party to the suit, the idol, which is a juridical person, although in an ideal sense, is, unquestionably a real party to the suit in the eye of the law. It is evident therefore that a shebait cannot, like the guardian of a minor, be regarded as a party to the suit. Consequently the objection made by a shebait asserting his own right is not an objection made by a party to the suit. On the other hand an objection made by a legal representative who is a real party to the suit is made by a party to the suit.

The objector Muhammad Shibli stands in the shoes of the judgment-debtors as his sale being subsequent to the attachment he is bound by the decree. When he claims the property to be his own in right of the judgment-debtors from whom he purchased and denies that it forms part of the assets of the deceased he is raising a question which relates to the execution of the decree in the suit. The case therefore falls to be governed by s. 47, Civil P. O., as has been rightly held by the lower Appellate Court.

There now survives the minor question as to the effect of the auction purchaser's non-joinder on the validity of the appeal. Reliance is placed on Haridass v. Mofatlal (22) but that was a case of an application made under O XXI, r 90, Civil P. O., and not one under s. 47 as in the present case. As pointed out in Brijlal v. Manohar Prasad (23) in a proceeding arising under s. 47 between the parties to the suit the auction purchaser is not a necessary party. The non-joinder of the auction purchaser in the appeal was not therefore fatal to it.

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 18, 5—Ex parte insolvency order—Application to set aside, if can be entertained—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 79, 19 (2)—Rules under s. 79—R. 5—Publication of order fixing date of hearing of petition under s. 19 (2), only in Government Gazette, if enough.

Order IX, r. 13 of the Civil P. O., is applicable to proceedings under the Insol Act also. Consequently an application for setting aside an insolvency order passed on a petition by the debtor, which was made ex parte can be entertained.

Rule 5 framed under s. 79, Insol. Act, nowhere provides that mere publication of the notice of order fixing date of hearing of petition under s. 19 (2) in the official Gazette will be enough. It distinctly provides that a copy of the notice should also be forwarded by registered letter to each creditor. Where the creditor has received no notice of either the application or the date of the hearing the Court must allow his petition for setting aside, the insolvency order passed ex parte and re-hear the matter. Mere publication in the Govt. Gazette of the notice is not enough. In such a case the question of prejudice is irrelevant.

A from an order of the District Judge of Manbhum, dated March 20, 1939.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar and Ramanugrah N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. S. Chatterji, for the Respondent.

Fazl Ali, J.—This is an appeal by a creditor from an order of the District Judge of Manbhum, rejecting his application praying that the order adjudging one Lachman Mistri as an insolvent be set aside and Lachman Mistri's insolvency petition be reheard.

Lachman Mistri made his application on June 18, 1938, in which he mentioned four creditors including the appellant. It appears that notices were issued to all the four creditors including the appellant, but in the notice which was issued to the appellant he was described as Ram Kumar Marwari, and not as Rampratap Marwari. A notice stating that Lachman Mistri had made an application for being declared insolvent was also published in the Bihar Gazette on July 20, 1938. On July 23, 1938, the learned Judge passed an ex parte order granting the application of Lachman Mistri for being declared insolvent. On July 28, 1938, the appellant appeared in Court and made an application for setting aside that order on the ground that he had received no notice of Lachman's application. The learned Judge dismissed this application on March 20, 1939, and hence this appeal.

The first question to be decided is whether an application for setting aside an insolvency order, which was made ex parte can be entertained. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that such an application is not maintainable. Under the Insol. Act, and the learned Advocate appearing on his behalf contends that if such an application could be entertained, there would have been a provision in the Act similar to s. 25, cl. (1). In that clause it is provided that "In the case of a petition presented by a creditor, where the Court is not satisfied with the proof of his right to present the petition or of the service on the debtor of notice of the order admitting the petition, or of the alleged act of insolvency, or is satisfied by the debtor that he is able to pay his debts, or that for any other sufficient cause no order ought to be made, the Court shall dismiss the petition."

It is pointed out that whereas the Act specifically provides that in the case of a petition presented by a creditor the petition may be dismissed if the Court is satisfied that there was no service on the debtor of notice of the order admitting the petition, no similar provision is made where a petition is presented by a debtor and the creditor is not served with a notice.

Section 18 of the Insol. Act provides that "The procedure laid down in the Civil P. C., 1908, with respect to the admission of plaints, shall so far as it is applicable, be followed in the case of insolvency petitions."

Again, s. 5 of the Act runs as follows:—

"(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Court, in regard to proceedings under this Act, shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction.

(2) Subject as aforesaid, High Courts and District Courts, in regard to proceedings under this Act in Courts, subordinate to them, shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as they respectively have and follow in regard to civil suits."

From these provisions it follows that O. IX r. 13 of the Civil P. C. is applicable to proceedings under the Insol. Act also and this view is supported by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mool Chand Ram v. Sarjoog Pershad (1) and certain observations made in Umar Din v. Raghu Nath Sahai (2). In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge was competent to entertain the application made by the appellant before him.

As to the merits of the application, it has been pointed out on behalf of the appellant that even the learned Judge has held that no notice was actually served on the appellant. The learned Judge has relied on the fact that a general notice had been duly published in the Bihar Gazette to the effect that Lachman Mistri had applied for being adjudicated insolvent and July 23, 1938 had been fixed for hearing and he has held that in view of the notification the appellant must be presumed to have had sufficient notice of the insolvency petition as well as of the date of the hearing. Section 19 of the Insol. Act says that "Where an insolvency petition is admitted, the Court shall make an order fixing a date for hearing the petition" and "notice of the order shall be given to creditors in such manner as may be prescribed." As the rules, which govern the procedure in this province, are the same as those framed by the Calcutta High Court under s. 79 of the Act, it becomes necessary to refer to r. 5 framed by the Calcutta High Court as regards the publication of notice to be issued under s. 19. This rule runs thus:

"Notice of an order fixing the date of the hearing of a petition under s. 19 (2) shall be published in the local official Gazette and advertised in such newspapers as the Court may direct. A copy of the notice shall also be forwarded by registered letter to each creditor to the address given in the petition."

It is to be noted that this rule nowhere provides that mere publication of the notice in the official Gazette will be enough. It distinctly provides that a copy of the notice should also be forwarded by registered letter to each creditor. In the present case the registered letter never reached the appellant. The learned Judge has presumed that the appellant must have had notice of the insolvency petition, because it was published in the official Gazette, but I find that the names of the creditors who were mentioned in Lachman

Mistri's petition were not published in the Gazette, and the notice was published as late as July 20, 1938, that is, only three days before the date fixed for the hearing of the application. The appellant has stated on oath that he had no notice of either the application or the date of the hearing, and in my opinion whatever presumption might arise from the fact of the publication of the notice in the Gazette has been rebutted by the one-sided evidence given in this case. That being so, the learned District Judge ought to have allowed the petition of the appellant and reheard the matter. The learned Judge has endeavoured to show that the appellant has not been in any way prejudiced. He has stated in his order that even if it is assumed that the appellant is the only creditor, his own decree against the insolvent amounts to more than Rs 1,665, and that there is nothing to show that the insolvent had so much assets as to enable him to pay up this amount. In my opinion, however, the learned Judge has in this matter misread the petition filed by the appellant before him. However that may be, under the law as it stands the question of prejudice appears to me to be irrelevant. The appellant has shewn that he had not received the notice issued under s. 19 of the Act, and as that provision is mandatory the learned Judge ought to have reheard the matter.

In these circumstances I would allow this appeal. The order of the learned Judge is set aside. There will be no order as to costs.

Federal Court—Appeal—Point not constitutional—No certificate on point under Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r 2—Point, if can be argued as of right—Leave under s. 205 (2), Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42)—Bihar Money-lenders Act, (III of 1938), s. 12—High Court using discretion—Interference by Federal Court—Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 7—Interest pendente lite—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 11.

In an appeal before the Federal Court where the ground taken is not a constitutional ground at all; and the appellants neither have appealed for nor obtained the certificate referred to in O. XLV, r. 2, Civil P. C., they are not entitled to argue it as of right. The Federal Court may, however, grant leave under s. 205 (2) of the Government of India Act.

The word "may" in the opening portion of s. 12 of Bihar Act VII of 1939 has not the meaning of the word "shall." Obviously by the use of the word "may" it is intended that the Court should consider the circumstances of each case and then decide whether it should or should not exercise all or any of the three powers mentioned in the section. The use of the word "may" indicates that the Court is not bound to exercise at least one of the powers, and may well not exercise any of the powers at all. The language as it stands can mean only this that the Court has the discretion to exercise all or any or none of the specified powers.

When the question is one of a discretion of the High Court under old s. 12, of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, the Federal Court cannot in appeal interfere with the way in which the discretion is exercised or not exercised, unless it appears that the High Court did not apply its mind at all to the question, or acted capriciously or in disregard of any legal principle, or was influenced by some extraneous considerations wrong in law. If there can be no legal objection to the way in which discretion has or has not been exercised by the High Court, then the Federal Court would not in appeal substitute its own discretion for that of the High Court. 45 Ind. Cas. 568 (2), relied on.

Rule 11 of O. XXXIV, Civil P. C., which removes any conflict that there might have been between s. 34 and O. XXXIV, rr. 2 and 4, gives a certain amount of discretion to the Court, so far as interest pendente lite and subsequent interest are concerned. It is no longer absolutely obligatory on the Courts to decree interest at the contractual rate up to the date of redemption in all circumstances, if there be no question of the rate being penal, excessive or substantially unfair within the meaning of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918, 140 Ind. Cas. 104 (5) and 185 Ind. Cas. 294 (6), relied on.

It may not be quite in harmony with the new provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regn. of Transactions) Act, to go back to the old practice or the old standard of high rates of interest, which were freely allowed. It may even be contrary to the spirit of the Bihar Act now to allow compound interest at a high contractual rate not only during the pendency of the suit but even up to six months after the preliminary decree to be passed hereafter. Of course, whether the Court would or would not give relief in respect of interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum, and if so to what extent, will depend on the special circumstances of each case. The opinion of the High Court on such a matter must carry weight, where, being conscious of its discretionary power under s. 8, it has considered the case not to be a fit one for the exercise of such power.

(The pendente lite interest was reduced to 12 per cent. per annum simple). 187 Ind. Cas. 476. (7), followed.

Mr. Raghbir Singh (Advocate Federal Court) with Messrs. A. C. S. Chari (Advocate Federal Court), Sarju Prasad and Rameshwar Misra Advocates, Patna High Court instructed by Mr. T. K. Prasad, Agent, for the Appellants.

Mr. Raj Kishore Prasad (Advocate, Federal Court) instructed by Mr. Tara-chand Brijmohanlal, Agent, for the Respondents.

Sulaiman, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought to enforce two simple mortgage-deeds, dated October 4, 1923, and April 24, 1930, for Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 1,800 respectively, carrying interest at Rs. 1-1-0 per cent. per mensem. compound every year. Most of the points which arise in this case are fully covered by our decision in Surendra Prasad Narain Singh v. Sri Gajadhar Prasad Sahu Trust Estate Case No. 9 of 1939 (1) decided today. It is therefore, necessary to deal with only the new points which have been raised in this appeal and which deal principally with the liability for interest. On behalf of the appellants it has been argued that the findings of the Courts below as regards legal necessity for the rate of interest are inadequate. In the first place, strictly speaking this is not a constitutional ground at all, and as the appellants neither appealed for nor obtained the certificate referred to in O. XLV, r. 2, Civil P. C., they are not entitled to argue it as of right. This Court may, however, grant leave under s. 205 (2) of the Act. In the second place there are at any rate by implication, concurrent findings of both the Courts that there was legal necessity for the rate of interest agreed upon.

The trial Court dealt with the question of legal necessity under issue No. 4, relating to the legal necessity for the debt, without expressly considering whether legal necessity for the rate of interest also had been established. It considered the rate of interest under issue No. 5, relating to the question of its being excessive and penal. The finding was against the defendants. The High Court also did not consider this matter under the head legal necessity, but considered it under the head rate of interest. As regards the first mortgage deed, it was pointed out that the earlier mortgage-deed and bonds carried compound interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem, with yearly rests. There was only one earlier promissory note for Rs. 50 carrying simple interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent, per mensem. In the opinion of the High Court the fresh transaction at compound interest; at Rs. 1-1-0 per cent. per mensem with yearly rests, was quite a prudent one. It was further pointed out that in the plaint the plaintiffs had claimed compound interest at the rate of Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem. As regards the second mortgage, the High Court pointed out that the plaintiffs' evidence showed that the usual rate of interest had varied from 1 to 2 per cent. per mensem, compoundable every year, which received support from the earlier transactions, and that there was no reliable evidence on the defendants' side to prove that such compound interest was excessive. No doubt, strictly speaking, the Courts when dealing with the question of legal necessity should have recorded an express finding that there was legal necessity not only for the amounts borrowed, but also for the rate of interest agreed upon. The burden did not in the first instance lie on the defendants to show that the rate of interest was necessarily excessive. But presumably the case was not argued before the High Court from this standpoint, and in any case it appears that the High Court was satisfied that the first transaction was quite prudent and therefore, the second transaction also, which involved the same rate of interest, was equally good. The trend of the High Court's opinion seems to be that there was legal necessity for the rate of interest agreed upon.

It is pointed out on behalf of the appellants that the original amount of the first mortgage deed, which had also included interest for a previous period, was only for Rs. 2,500 while the plaintiffs claimed over Rs. 11,000 at the date of the suit. Similarly they were claiming about double the amount on the second deed. The trial Court had no occasion at all to consider the re-opening of the transaction under the old s. 12, as the Act came into force after the case was decided by it. It is, therefore, contended that the High Court was wrong in not applying s. 12 of the old Money Lenders Act on the ground that it had "a complete discretion." It is argued that discretion is not arbitrary but must be exercised judicially. The High Court has however, said that upon the facts of this case there is nothing which would justify the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, in re-opening the accounts. It, therefore, appears that the High Court did consider this point but did not think it fit to re-open the transaction. The grounds which might have influenced the High Court were probably those discussed earlier when considering the rate of interest. When the question was one of a discretion of the High Court we cannot in appeal interfere with the way in which the discretion was exercised or not exercised, unless it appears that the High Court did not apply its mind at all to the question, or acted capriciously or in disregard of any legal principle, or was influenced by some extraneous considerations wrong in law. If there can be no legal objection to the way in which discretion has or has not been exercised by the High Court, then we would not in appeal substitute our own discretion for that of the High Court. Rehmatnissa Begam v. Price (2).

It is then argued that the High Court had really no discretion in the matter and should have acted under the old s. 12 to which s. 8 of the new Act applies. It is argued that the word "may" in the opening portion of the section has the meaning of the word "shall" and that the Court has the option of exercising all or any of the three powers mentioned therein, but has no power not to exercise any of the three powers at all. This contention cannot be accepted. While the word "may" occurs in the opening portion of the section, the word "shall" occurs in the Proviso, and these two words must have distinct meanings. It also appears that the legislature has advisedly used the word may in some sections like 10 and 11, while it has deliberately used the word "shall" in sections like 4, 5, 6 and 7 and also 13 and 14. The policy of the Act clearly appears to be to prohibit rate of interest in excess of 9 per cent. per mensem for secured loan advanced after the Act came into force (s. 5) and to prohibit compound interest altogether for loans advanced after the Act (s. 6). On the other hand, as regards previous loans, s. 7 creates a bar against interest exceeding the principal, and s. 8 gives a discretion to the Court to give other reliefs according to circumstances. Obviously by the use of the word "may" it is intended that the Court should consider the circumstances of each case and then decide whether it should or should not exercise all or any of the three powers mentioned in the section. Had the intention been as contended for on behalf of the appellants, the language would have been 'the Court shall exercise all or any of the following powers.' The use of the word "may" indicates that the Court is not bound to exercise at least one of the powers, and may well not exercise any of the powers at all. The language as it stands can mean only this that the Court has the discretion to exercise all or any of none of the specified powers.

A further point has been urged on behalf of the respondents that the new s. 7 is ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature. The argument is as follows: Quite apart from any question of repugnancy, which is cured by the assent of the Governor-General, s. 7 has been enacted to reduce interest on all loans including loans based on a document. Now a loan based on cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes and other like instruments, would be a loan based on a document within the meaning of the section and would be governed by the prohibition contained in it. But "cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes and other like instruments" fall under List I, Entry No. 28, of the Seventh Schedule, and are within the exclusive powers of the Federal Legislature. By virtue of s. 10 read with s. 316, it follows that the power of the Provincial Legislatures to make enactments in respect of these documents is wholly excluded. If the provisions of s. 7 would be void in such particular cases, then the whole section must be deemed to be altogether void.

Although one of the previous debts had in part been based on a promissory note, the present suit is based on a mortgage deed and not on a promissory note and the field is therefore apparently clear. The period of limitation being short, s. 7 would rarely apply to suits on promissory notes. It is accordingly unnecessary to consider the objection in detail in this case, particularly as the point does not directly arise, nor has it been fully argued before us. Even the Full Bench case of the Madras High Court, Mada Nagaratnam v. Puvadda Seshayya (3) was not cited at the Bar.

Lastly, a question has been raised whether we are bound to allow the contractual rate of interest pendente lite. Prior to 1929 the position was that there was the general s. 34, Civil P. O., under which in a decree for payment of money the Court had full discretion to order interest at such rate as it deemed reasonable to be paid on the principal sum adjudged from the date of the suit onwards. Then there were rr. 2 and 4, of O. XXXIV, which applied to a mortgage suit, and the Court had to order an account to be taken of what was due to the plaintiff at the date of such decree for principal "and interest on the mortgage." According to s. 57-A of the T. P. Act, mortgage money also included the interest on the principal secured by the mortgage. The special provision in O. XXXIV had to be applied in preference to the general provision in s. 34. Till the period for redemption expired, the matter was considered to remain in contract and the interest had to be paid at the rate specified in the contract. Jagannath Prosad Singh Chowdhury v. Surajmul Jalal (4).

By Act XXI of 1929, O. XXXIV was amended, and a new r. 11 was inserted, which deals specially with interest, and provides that the Court "may" order payment of interest to the mortgagee up to the date fixed for payment at the rate payable on the principal. It follows that this special provision, which removes any conflict that there might have been between s. 34 and O. XXXIV, rr. 2 and 4, gives a certain amount of discretion to the Court, so far as interest pendente lite and subsequent interest are concerned. It is no longer absolutely obligatory on the Courts to decree interest at the contractual rate up to the date of redemption in all circumstances, if there be no question of the rate being penal, excessive or substantially unfair within the meaning of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. See Sripat Singh v. Naresh Chandra Bose (5) although in this case when considering O. XXXIV, r. 2, the Privy Council case of Jagannath Prosad Singh Chowdhury v. Surajmul Jalal (4) was overlocked. In Jagdish Jha v. Aman Khan (6) interest after the institution of the suit was ordered by this Court to be paid at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the principal amount till the date fixed for payment. In my opinion the view then taken as to the power of a Court to reduce interest pendente lite was not contrary to law.

The Bihar Legislature, as shown by the Preamble of Act III of 1938, in order to give relief to debtors has inaugurated a new policy by regulating Money-lending transactions. Section 6 makes any contract for the payment of compound interest after the Act came into force altogether void. Section 7 disallows interest up to suit in excess of the amount of the principal. Section 8 gives power to the Court to re-open the whole transaction and give relief in respect of interest in excess of 9 per cent. simple per annum in the case of a secured loan notwithstanding any contract to the contrary. The power of the Court to reduce interest in Bihar has, therefore become much wider than that under the Usurious Loans Act. It may not be quite in harmony with these new provisions to go back to the old practice or the old standard of high rates of interest, which were freely allowed. It may even be contrary to the spirit of the Bihar Act now to allow compound interest at a high contractual rate not only during the pendency of the suit but even up to six months after the preliminary decree to be passed hereafter.

Of course, whether the Court would or would not give relief in respect of interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum, and if so to what extent, will depend on the special circumstances of each case. The opinion of the High Court on such a matter must carry weight, where, being conscious of its discretionary power under s. 8, it has considered the case not to be a fit one for the exercise of such power. Just as in Case No. 13 decided today Subbanand Chandra v. Apurba Krishna Mitra (7) the pendente lite interest should be reduced to 12 per cent. per annum simple.

Varadachariar, J.—I wish to add a few words, with reference to the argument urged on behalf of the appellants as to the manner in which s. 7 of Bihar Act VII of 1939 should be applied to one of the loans sought to be recovered in this case. The appellants also sought to invoke the aid of s. 8 of that Act, with a view to re-open the settlement of accounts made at the time of the execution of the mortgage bond. Ex. V. But, as held by the High Court, that section (7) 127 Ind. Cas. 436; 6 B R 499.

only gives a discretionary power and we have not been shown sufficient reason for interfering with the refusal of the High Court to exercise that power in the circumstances of this case. It is true that in the particular paragraph dealing with this question, the learned Judges have not assigned their reasons; but the reasons are fairly gatherable from the rest of the judgment.

The suit comprised claims under two mortgage bonds, Ex. V dated October 4, 1923 and Ex. V (a) dated April 24, 1930. The interest due under Ex. V (a) up to the date of the institution of the suit did not amount to a sum equal to the principal amount of the bond; no question therefore arises under s. 7 of Bihar Act VII of 1939, in respect of that bond. The earlier bond, Ex. V, had been executed to secure repayment of a sum of Rs. 2,500 and it provided for the payment of compound interest with annual rests at Rs. 1-10 per cent. per mensem. This amount of Rs. 2,500 was made up of a sum of Rs. 1,500 received in cash to pay off another creditor of the mortgagors and a sum of Rs. 1,000 treated as paid to the mortgagees themselves in discharge of antecedent debts due to them from the mortgagors. The bond gave particulars of the antecedent debts; and after reciting that, the amount due up to that date for principal and interest in respect of those debts was Rs. 1,047, it provided for the payment of Rs. 1,000 out of the mortgage loan towards that amount.

With reference to Ex. V, the learned Counsel for the appellants contended that, even under s. 7 of Act VII of 1939, the Court must re-open the account in respect of the antecedent debts referred to in Ex. V and limit the interest claimable by the plaintiffs up to the date of the suit, in respect of this portion of the mortgage debt, to the amount of principal due under the antecedent transactions. I am unable to accede to this contention. The case is certainly one of a "loan based on a document;" and under the concluding words of s. 7, interest is in such a case claimable up to the "amount of loan mentioned in the document." The loan document must in this case be taken to be Ex. V and not the earlier documents referred to in it, because the definition of "loan" in s. 2 (f) includes a "transaction on a bond executed in respect of past liability." How exactly this definition and the provision of s. 7 are to be applied to ordinary cases of "renewals" it is not necessary for the purposes of this case to decide. Where however, as in the present case, the parties settle accounts in respect of a pre-existing liability and agree that money borrowed under a later transaction, even from the same creditor, should be applied in discharge of that pre-existing liability, it seems to me that the later transaction should in law be regarded as a loan by itself, though cash did not actually pass between the parties by way of lending and repayment [see observations of Greer L.J., as he then was, in Lyle v. Chappell (8), referred to with approval by the Judicial Committee in S. R. M. S. Chethambaram Chettiar v. Loo Thon Poo (9).]

The appeal is allowed and the decree of the Courts below modified to this extent, viz., that the interest payable to the plaintiffs up to the date of the institution of the suit in respect of Ex. V will be limited to Rs. 2,500. The question of interest pendente lite has been dealt with in Case No. 13 of 1937. On both the bonds, the principal amounts will carry simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suit to the date fixed for payment in the revised decree to be passed by the High Court. After that date, there will be interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the aggregate amount of principal, interest and costs up to date of realisation. The case will be remitted to the High Court for a revised decree being passed on the above basis. The plaintiffs-respondents will retain the costs awarded to them by the decrees of the High Court and of the trial Court. There will be no order as to costs in this Court.

The appellants' learned Counsel applied for an order under s. 10 of the Bihar Act of 1939 permitting payment by instalments. The appellants will be at liberty to make the application before the High Court which has to pass the decree.

Gwyer, C.J.—I concur and have nothing to add.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Power to rectify errors in decree—Personal decree passed against legal representative—Error, if can be rectified in execution by Court passing decree—Will—Construction—Sons' interest held contingent and could not be attached.

Where a decree on the face of it shows that a person sued in his representative capacity has been burdened with a liability which is not consonant with that capacity, the error is obviously that of a ministerial officer. In such a case the Court which made the decree and which is empowered by s. 152, Civil P. C., to rectify its error at any time, is not debarred from exercising its powers under the section, merely because that error has been brought to its notice in the course of an application, in which the decree-holder is seeking to execute the decree in a manner which the Court could never have intended when it passed the decree. In re Swire, Mellor v. Swire (1), relied on. 142 Ind. Cas. 60 (2), distinguished.

A will stated "I give and devise my real and personal property to my beloved wife for life and after her death to vest in my sons or their heirs who may then be in existence. It is my wish that my sons hereinbefore mentioned will not be entitled to my estate during the lifetime of my said wife".

Held, that the intention of the testator was that the estate was only to vest (i. e., to vest in interest) after the death of the wife. Hence the interest of the sons was contingent and was not attachable. In re Deighton's Settled Estates (3), referred to.

Mr. H. C. Majumdar, for the Applicants.

Messrs. P. C. Ghosh and S. K. Bose, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application by mortgagees for execution of a decree dated March 20, 1928. The decretal amount was Rs. 24,632-12-9. The mortgagors were three of the sons of Kanailal Mullick, who died on December 31, 1898. Kanailal, by his will, gave a life interest in his property to his widow with remainder to his sons and their heirs. One of the mortgagors, Gokul Lal Mullick, died in 1925, and one of his sons, Hariharlal is contesting this application. The widow Uttommoni died on May 22, 1938. In May 1930, the mortgagees attached the share of the defendants in the compensation money lying with the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal by reason of the compulsory acquisition of Nos. 33 and 33½, Ratan Sircar Garden Street. In September 1933 the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the compensation money was sold and the proceeds of sale were applied in part satisfaction of the decree. Part of the compensation money was invested in Govt. promissory notes and the balance in landed property in 67-B Raja Naba Krishna Street and 21-A Shib Shanker Mullick Lane and was held on behalf of Uttommoni as executrix of Kanailal's estate. Uttommoni died in May 1938, and the decree holders now seek to attach the judgment-debtors' interest in these properties, and in the Govt. promissory notes in the custody of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal. Gokul Lal Mullick's sons object to the attachment on the ground that they are only liable to the extent of their father's property which came into their hand as his legal representatives and they contend that Gokul Lal had only a contingent and not a vested interest in his father's estate during the life of Uttommoni.

Mr. Majumdar for the attaching creditors relies first on the words of the decree. Monohar and Harihar are defendants described in the cause title as "sons, heirs and legal representatives of Gokul Lal Mullick, deceased," and in the body of the decrees: "It is ordered and decreed that the defendants personally do pay to the plaintiffs the said sum, etc." Mr. Majumdar contends that the word "personally" attaches a personal liability to each and every defendant and being unqualified it cannot be confined to the liability of Monohar and Harihar in their representative capacity and only to the extent of assets that have come into their hands. On the other hand, it is suggested that the decree does not express the real order of the Court and I am invited to use my powers under s. 152 to rectify the decree on the ground that the suggested alteration is correcting what is really a mistake of the ministerial officer by whom the decree or order was drawn up.

There is no doubt that the Court has the power under s. 152 to correct an error or omission in the decree and this seems to me to be clearly a case in which that power should be exercised. There was no judgment delivered in the case so that it cannot be said that the decree is not in conformity with the judgment but it is clear from the cause title that Harihar and his brother have been sued only in their representative capacity, and it is equally clear that in such capacity their liability is limited to the assets of the person whom they represent which have come into their hands. There has in my opinion been an accidental omission sion in the operative part of the decree which provides for personal liability, in failing to limit the liability of Gokul's sons. It has been held both in Bombay and in Lahore that the passing of a personal decree against the legal representatives is an accidental slip, which may be corrected under this section, and, with respect, that is a view in which I concur. The objection is raised that this is an application in execution and that this Court as an executing Court is not entitled to go behind the actual words of the decree even if it has that power under s. 152. In In re Swire, Mellor v. Swire (1) Bown, L. J., said :

"Every Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are within its power, and it can set right any mistake in them. It seems to me perfectly shocking if the Court could not rectify an error which is really the error of its own minister."

The power to rectify such error can be exercised at any time, and although it is true that the present application is an application in execution, yet the Court which is now invited to rectify the error is the same Court which passed the decree. The decisions in Kali Charan Singha v. Bibhut Bhushan Singha (2) and similar cases are distinguishable. There the question agitated in the executing Court was whether some other Court which had tried the suit has jurisdiction to make the decree and it was held that the executing Court could not go into the merits or the validity of the decree as made. Here there is no question of the validity of the decree of which execution is sought. The decree on the face of it shows that a person sued in his representative capacity has been burdened with a liability which is not consonant with that capacity. The error is obviously that of a ministerial officer. In the circumstances, I fail to see why the Court which made the decree and which is empowered by s. 152 to rectify its error at any time, should be debarred from exercising its powers under the section, merely because that error has been brought to its notice in the course of an application, in which the decree-holder is seeking to execute the decree in a manner which the Court could never have intended when it passed the decree. Reliance is also placed on the fact that an application for execution of this decree was made in 1930, when Harihar himself appeared and raised no objection to the form of the decree. This omission does not in my opinion operate as res judicata, and there is no ground for suggesting that the decree-holder has thereby altered his position to his detriment so as to introduce the doctrine of estoppel.

For the decree-holders it is further argued that all the defendants are liable because under Kanailal's will they took a vested interest in his estate at the date of his death. The testator by his will appointed his widow his executrix. He referred to his six sons by name and having empowered his widow to mortgage his estate for the marriage expenses of his daughters, he directs that such mortgage shall be binding in law upon his sons or their heirs who shall inherit his estate after the death of his wife. This is the first reference to his sons' estate. Later he says :

"I give and devise my real and personal property to my beloved wife ... for life ... and after her death to vest in my sons or their heirs who may then be in existence."

Later again he says :

"It is my wish that my sons hereinbefore mentioned will not be entitled to my estate during the lifetime of my said wife."

It will be remembered that only three of the testator's sons were the mortgagors. Harihar and Monohar are introduced on the death of their father Gokul and if their father's interest is only a contingent interest, which does not ripen into an estate of inheritance until Uttommoni's death, it is not liable to attachment. The general rule of law is in favour of the vesting of an estate, so that in the absence of any contrary disposition the estate of the testator's sons should vest immediately on the testator's death. The words of the will have provided that the sons shall inherit on the death of the testator's widow. The gift is of an estate in futurity and the question is whether the words used by the testator were intended to delay the vesting of the sons' interest or merely to delay their possession. Ordinarily, the words "after the death of the life tenant" operate to vest the estate both in the life tenant and in the remainderman on the death of the testator. It is argued that the words in the will providing that the sons shall not be entitled to the testator's estate "until" the marriage of the unmarried daughters, or "until" the youngest son attain the age of 25, are evidence of the desire to grant a vested interest and exclude the idea of a contingent gift, which would have been conveyed by some such expression as "if and when" in place of the word "until." It is also clear on the authorities that the ordinary meaning of the word "vest" means "vest in interest." The testator here by his will devises his real and personal estate to his wife for life and "after her death to vest in his sons or their heirs who may be then in existence." The intention seems to me clear that the estate was only to vest (i.e., to vest in interest) after the death of the wife. As was said by James, L. J., in In re Deighton's Settled Estates (3) at p. 785 :

"The Court leans strongly in favour of the early vesting of interests in cases where the effect of holding the share of a child of the testator to be contingent on his living to a future period would be that, if he died before that period leaving a family, his children would take no benefit under the will; but there is no reason for departing from the fair meaning of the words of a testator in order to vest the shares of his children, when he has made a provision for all his descendants living when the fund becomes divisible."

The words "then in existence" strengthen my view that the testator was contemplating the period of vesting as being at a future date, viz. on the death of his wife; and the words later in the will in which the testator expresses his wish that his sons should not be "entitled" to his estate during the lifetime of his wife add further support to this construction. The applicant relies on s. 119, Succession Act, in support of his contention that the sons' interest is vested in them at the testator's death, and that possession alone is postponed; but s. 119, while it provides the general rule following the English Law, contains the words "unless a contrary intention appears by the will," and in my opinion Kanailal's will contains more than one expression which shows a contrary intention. Reliance has also been placed on the proceedings in connection with Uttommoni's application to be appointed guardian of her grand-daughter Umasasi, as an indication that the construction for which the applicant now contends has been the accepted construction of the will by the members of the family, including Gokul. Uttommoni made the application in 1924 and in para. 9 of her petition she stated :

"The abovenamed infant (i. e., Umasasi) is entitled to a vested interest in respect of one undivided sixth share in certain houses forming part of Kanailal's estate."

Gokul consented to the application, but his consent was only to the prayer of the petition that Uttommoni should be appointed guardian. It cannot be said that he thereby accepted every statement or submission of law which the petition contained. His action does not in my view operate as any kind of estoppel so as to prevent him or his sons from putting forward their present contention as to the construction of the will. In the result, I hold that Harihar and Monohar are not personally liable for the unpaid balance of the mortgage money and their share is not liable to attachment in execution of the decree of March 20, 1928. The attachment will issue as prayed in respect of the interest of the judgment-debtors Naba Kumar Mullick and Baidya Nath Mullick. The decree will be amended by the addition of words indicating that Monohar and Harihar Mullick are only liable in their representative capacity. The decree was passed 10 years ago and had Harihar then sought to have it amended it is possible that the present somewhat protracted hearing would have been avoided. In the circumstances I consider the proper order to be that each party pay his own costs. Certified for Counsel. The applicant may add his costs to his claim. The interim orders and undertakings are dissolved.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182—Decree for payment of money by instalments—Application to recover some of instalments then due—Whether step-in-aid of execution in respect of instalments not due.

If there is an application for execution of so much of the decree as is executable, that is a step-in-aid of execution of the decree and prevents time running in respect of the whole decree.

Hence where a decree is for payment of money by instalments and an application is made to recover some of the instalments then due, the application is a step-in-aid of execution even in respect of instalments not due at the time of the application. 67 Ind. Judgment. — This is a second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of East Khandesh raising a point of limitation. Unfortunately the respondents have not appeared and therefore I have not had the advantage of any argument in support of the judgment of the learned District Judge which confirmed that of the learned trial Judge. But the point is a very short one and depends entirely on the construction of para. 5 of Art. 182, Lim. Act. The facts which give rise to the difficulty are these:

In 1927 a mortgage decree was made for payment of a sum of money by four equal annual instalments. The first instalment was to be paid in December 1927, and the other instalments in December 1928, 1929 and 1930. In July 1929 a darkhast was issued to recover the two instalments then due and that darkhast was disposed of on April 20, 1932. The present darkhast was issued on June 5, 1935, but it was not disputed that by reason of the vacation of the Court that darkhast has to be treated as within three years from the date of the dismissal of the previous darkhast. Both the lower Courts held that the present darkhast being within three years from the dismissal of the previous darkhast, the first two instalments to which that first darkhast related were saved from limitation, but as the first darkhast did not relate to the two later instalments which were not due at the time of its issue, there was no step-in-aid of execution in respect of the last two instalments which were therefore time-barred.

It is, on the face of it, a rather singular result to arrive at, that the two earlier instalments are not timebarred, whilst the two later instalments are. Both the lower Courts regarded the decision of this Court in Sitabai v. Keshavrao (1) as governing the present case. But, in my opinion, that decision does not determine the question which arises here. In that case there was a decree for payment by instalments, and in 1918 there was a darkhast to recover the instalments due in 1911, 1912 and 1913 which were recovered, and in 1919 a darkhast to recover the instalments due in 1914 and 1915 was filed and it was held that the earlier darkhast was a step-in-aid of execution which kept the decree alive in respect of the instalments of 1914 and 1915, which were not covered by the earlier darkhast. The appellant contends that the decision is in his favour, and not against him as the lower Courts suppose. But the distinction between that case and the present is that at the time of the earlier darkhast which was relied on as a step-in-aid of execution the later instalments were due although they were not sought to be recovered by that darkhast and at the conclusion of his judgment the learned Chief Justice said (p. 722*):

"... but we see no reason why a darkhast which asks for the assistance of the Court for the recovery of one of several instalments due at the date of the darkhast, should not be considered as a step-in-aid so as to start a new period of limitation with regard to all the instalments then due."

No doubt the decision is limited to the facts of that case in which all the instalments were due at the date of the earlier darkhast, and it does not cover a case, like the present, where the later instalments were not due. It may be contended that a darkhast cannot be regarded as a step in execution of a part of the decree which is not executable at its date, but one has to look to the actual language of Art. 182. That Article provides that for the execution of a decree time is to be three years from the alternative dates which are set out in the seven paragraphs in col. 3. For a second application like the one in the present case there is no doubt that it is para. 5 which applies, and that paragraph amounts to this, that where there is an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order, then time runs from the date of the final order passed on that application. At the date of the decision in Sitabai v. Keshavrao (1) time ran from the date of the application, and not of the final order, but that, I think, does not alter the nature of the problem to be determined. The point to notice is that if there is an application to take some step-in-aid in execution of the decree, then time runs from the final order made on that application. It seems to me, on the language of the Article that if there is an application for execution of so much of the decree as is executable that is a step-in-aid of execution of the decree and prevents time running in respect of the whole decree.

Mr. Chitale has also referred to the case in Latafat Ali Khan v. Kalyan Mat (2) which, I think, to some extent, assists him.

In that case moneys were payable under a decree by instalments, and in 1925 there was a payment into Court in respect of the instalment due in that year, and that money was taken out of Court in 1928. It was held that taking the money out of Court in respect of the 1925 instalment was a step-in-aid of execution of the decree and kept the decree alive in respect of the 1926 and 1927 instalments. No doubt those instalments were due at the date of the step-in-aid of execution, but that step had nothing to do with the execution of the decree in respect of those two instalments. In my opinion, both the lower Courts have misunderstood the effect in Sitabai v. Keshavrao (1) and the appeal must be allowed with costs throughout and the darkhast must continue.

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Compromise of date subsequent to trial decree, if can be recorded under O. XXI, r. 2.

Compromise of a date subsequent to the final decree in a suit can be recorded under O. XXI, r. 2, in execution proceedings. 180 Ind. Cas. 378 (2), relied on.

F. A. from an order of the Civil Judge, Cawnpore, dated March 8, 1938.

Mr. C. B. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondent.

Bennet, J.—This is a first appeal by the judgment-debtors against an order of the Court below refusing to entertain an application to record an alleged compromise. The application was headed as an application under O. XXIII, r. 3. The sole ground for refusal was that the alleged compromise was of a date subsequent to the final decree in the suit and therefore as r. 4 of O. XXIII states that O. XXIII does not apply to execution proceedings the compromise could not be recorded under that Order. The judgment debtor in appeal points out that although O. XXIII will not apply O. XXI, r. 2 will apply and he asks that the Court below be directed to consider his allegations of a compromise under that rule. No ground has been shown by learned Counsel for the decree-holder as to why this should not be done. Some argument was made in regard to Gobardhan Das v. Dau Dayal (1) which was a Full Bench ruling of this Court. Among other matters there is a statement by one learned Judge on p. 537:

The line of reasoning adopted in some cases is that a compromise in an execution Court is in the nature of an adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, and that, if certified, it can be enforced by the execution Court. But an adjustment within the meaning of that rule should be a transaction which extinguishes the decree as such in whole or in part and results in its total or partial satisfaction. A transaction by which parties agree to vary the mode by which the reliefs granted by the decree are to be realised in execution or vary the time when the decree becomes executable would really be a transaction attempting to vary the terms of the decree.

This point of view has been considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fuzabad v. Bind Basni Kuer (2) at p. 487 where their Lordships observe as follows:

The authority relied upon by the learned Judges of the Chief Court is Gobardhan Das v. Dau Dayal (1) and the principle invoked is that the original cannot be altered or varied by the parties even with the sanction of the Court and that in any case mere consent of the parties cannot confer such a jurisdiction on the executing Court. This line of reasoning is not without support from other decisions of Indian High Courts though authority and practice to the contrary is also to be found. On this difficult and important question their Lordships are not in agreement with the view taken by the Chief Court. They do not consider that it takes sufficient account of the facts that the Code contains no general restriction of the parties' liberty of contract with reference to their rights and obligations under the decree and that if they do contract upon terms which have reference to and affect the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree the provisions of s. 47 involve that questions relating to such terms may fall to be determined by the executing Court.

It appears to us therefore that there is no bar in law to the recording of the alleged compromise under O. XXI, r. 2. Accordingly we allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below, and remand this case to the Court below to hear the evidence for the parties and dispose of the application on the merits and according to law. Costs hitherto in the Court below and here will abide the result.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 3, 6—Defendant borrowing money from plaintiff to carry on money suit filed by him against X and executing mortgage in plaintiff's favour assigning decree that would be passed in his suit—Decree passed—Suit by plaintiff for mere declaration that he was entitled to recover his dues out of amount payable under decree—There was held transfer of actionable claim and not of mere right to sue—Suit held not bad under s. 42, Specific Relief Act.

An assignment of future or non-existing property is quite valid and the transfer becomes operative as soon as the property comes into existence. Holroyd v. Marshall (4), Ogbyer v. Isaacs (5), and Palaniappa v. Lakshmanan (6), relied on.

Defendant borrowed money from the plaintiff aggregating to Rs. 1,500, to carry on a money suit instituted by him against X and he executed a mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiff assigning by way of security the decree that would be passed in the money suit instituted by him. The stipulation was that the plaintiff would be entitled to realize out of the decretal amount the sum of Rs. 1,500 due to him together with interest at the rate mentioned in the document. Subsequently a decree was passed in favour of defendant in the money suit for a certain sum. On appeal this sum was reduced. The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that on the strength of the mortgage bond he was entitled to have his dues realized out of the amount payable under the decree:

Held, that what was transferred was the claim to a debt and as such would come within the definition of 'actionable claim' as given in s. 3, T. P. Act. The mere fact that the claim was reduced by the Court did not make, any difference. What was transferred was not a mere right to sue:

Held, also that the plaintiff was an assignee of the decree for the purpose of realizing the amount due on the mortgage bond and was competent under the terms of the bond itself to institute proceedings for recovery of the amount.

Held, further that all that the plaintiff could want possibly was a declaration that he was an assignee of the decree, and if he got a declaration it would be open to him to apply for execution of the decree under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. O. No other consequential reliefs, by way of injunction or otherwise could or should have been prayed for by the plaintiff in the suit and the suit for mere declaration without consequential relief was not bad, under s. 42, Specific Relief Act.

A, from the appellate decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated December 10, 1937.

Messrs. Surajit Chandra Lahiri and Amarendra Chandra Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Basu, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This appeal is on behalf of defendant No. 2 and it arises out of a suit commenced by the plaintiff for a declaration that as an assignee of a decree passed in money suit No. 258 of 1928 he was entitled to realize the decretal amount amicably or by execution of the decree. The facts lie within a narrow compass and are for the most part undisputed. Defendant No. 1 filed a suit, being Money Suit No. 258 of 1928, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Berhampur against the London Mission Society and another person, for recovery of a sum of Rs. 7,997 0-5 only. Defendant No. 1 borrowed money at different dates from the plaintiff aggregating to Rs. 1,000, to carry on this litigation and on August 23, 1932, he executed a mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiff assigning by way of security the decree that would be passed in the money suit instituted by him. The stipulation was that the plaintiff would be entitled to realize out of the decretal amount the sum of Rs. 1,500 due to him together with interest at the rate mentioned in the document. On March 8, 1934, a decree was passed in favour of defendant No. 1 in the money suit for a sum of Rs. 2,566-10-0 only. On appeal to this Court preferred by the defendants it was further reduced to Rs. 1,743-2-0. The judgment of this Court is dated December 22, 1936. The plaintiff now wants a declaration that on the strength of the mortgage bond mentioned aforesaid she is entitled to have her dues realized out of the amount payable under the decree mentioned aforesaid. As defendant No. 2 purported to be a subsequent transferee of the same decree under a conveyance executed on April 20, 1934, he was made a party to the suit as it was necessary to have the declaration in his presence. Defendant No. 1 did not contest the suit. It was contested by defendant No. 2 alone. His contention in substance was that the plaintiff was a mere benamiar of defendant No. 1 and there was no consideration for the alleged mortgage bond. It was further pleaded that the plaintiff acquired no rights under the decree passed in Money Suit No. 258 of 1928 which was sold to defendant No. 2, for money due to the latter by defendant No. 1 who was stated to be a partner in the former's business. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit primarily on the finding that the mortgage bond upon which the plaintiff rested his case was a benami document which was not supported by any consideration. On appeal the judgment was reversed. The District Judge who heard the appeal held on evidence that the mortgage bond was for a consideration and that the plaintiff as an assignee of the decree was entitled to execute it. It is against this decision that the present second appeal has been preferred.

Mr. Lahiri who appears for the appellant has urged a number of points in support of his appeal. His first contention is that as a decree for a definite sum of money was not in existence at the date when the mortgage bond was executed in favour of the plaintiff, she was an assignee only of a right to sue which is not alienable under the T. P. Act. The plaintiff therefore has not acquired any rights under the decree and cannot claim to execute it. In support of this contention the learned Advocate has relied upon certain decisions of this Court which are to be found in Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (1), Jewan Ram v. Ratan Chand Kissen Chand (2) and Khetra Mohan Das v. Biswa Nath Bera (3). I do not think that this contention is sound. It is true, as was laid down in all these decisions that the right to sue for damages of an unascertained amount resulting from a breach of contract could not be transferred. What is assignable is the benefit of the contract before any breach occurred. As the breach discharges the contract nothing remains after that but the mere right to sue for damages which is not assignable in law. This principle however is of no assistance to the appellant in the present case. Here the plaintiff in the money suit did not sue for damages arising out of a breach of contract. He did certain building works for the defendants in the suit and some bills were unpaid. A suit was brought to recover the money due on these unpaid bills. In my opinion, what was transferred was the claim to a debt and as such would come within the definition of 'actionable claim' as given in s. 3, T. P. Act. The mere fact that the claim was reduced by the Court did not make, in my opinion, any difference. It cannot be disputed that an assignment of future or non-existing property is quite valid and the transfer becomes operative as soon as the property comes into existence; Holroyd v. Marshall (4), Collyer v.

Issacs (5) and Palaniappa v. Lakshmanan (6). Here the mortgage must be deemed to have attached itself to the decree which was for a definite amount as soon as a decree was passed and I am unable to agree with the appellant that what was transferred was a mere right to sue.

The second argument that is put forward is that the plaintiff was at best a mortgagee in respect of the rights under the decree and unless she purchased the entire rights of the decree-holder she could not rank as an assignee of the decree and was not entitled to execute it as such. The assignment was undoubtedly by way of mortgage and not of the entire rights of the assignor. What the assignee was entitled to under the terms of the instrument was to realize the sum of Rs. 1,500 together with interest on the decretal amount and she was to pay the balance, if any, to the assignor. She was therefore an assignee of the decree for the purpose of realizing the amount due on the mortgage bond and she was competent under the terms of the bond itself to institute proceedings for recovery of the amount. I think there is nothing wrong in the form of the relief that has been granted to her by the Court below. The third ground put forward by the appellant is that the suit which was one for a pure declaration was bad under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, and the plaintiff ought to have prayed for consequential relief in the shape of a permanent injunction restraining defendant No. 2 from executing the decree. This argument is manifestly untenable. All that the plaintiff could want possibly at the present stage was a declaration that she was an assignee of the decree, and if she gets a declaration it would be open to her to apply for execution of the decree under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. No other consequential reliefs, by way of injunction or otherwise could or should have been prayed for by the plaintiff in the present suit. The last argument of the appellant is directed against the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the mortgage bond was not a benami transaction and was supported by consideration. This is a finding of fact even though there is no other evidence except that of the plaintiff's husband in support of it. In my opinion, the Court of Appeal below has given reasons for this finding and the finding being based on evidence is unassailable in second appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 106—Order under, when can be passed—Conviction under s. 323, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), set aside and one under s. 342, Penal Code maintained—Order under s. 106, if can be passed.

One has to see not whether on the facts the persons against whom an order under s. 106, Criminal P. C., is passed did commit a breach of the peace but whether they were convicted of an offence which necessarily involves a breach of the peace. If the offence is one in which a breach of the peace may have been committed in the circumstances of the case but which in other circumstances does not necessarily involve a breach of the peace, an order under s. 106 of the Criminal P. C., cannot be passed. Where the Judge has set aside the conviction under s. 323, I. P. C., leaving only the conviction under s. 342, I. P. C., an order under s. 106, Criminal P. C., cannot be passed. 135 Ind. Cas. 691 (2), followed, 71 Ind. Cas. 879 (1), referred to.

Or. R. App. of the order of the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad, dated November 19, 1939.

Mr. Nasirullah Beg for Mr. Hakimuddin for the Applicants.

The Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision on the part of seven persons Akhtar Husain, Wajid Khan, Riasat Khan, Jan Mohammad Khan, Sheikh Nasir, Mithoo, and Nizam Uddin who have been convicted under s. 342 of the I. P. C., and against whom an order under s. 106 of the Criminal P. C., has also been passed. These persons at first had also been convicted under s. 323 of the I. P. C. but that conviction was set aside by the learned Sessions Judge on appeal.

The facts are not contested, namely, that the applicants with others at the time when feelings between the Hindus and Muhammadans ran high, pursued a number of Hindus one of them being Ram Niranjan and took him to the Police Station accusing him of theft. Ram Niranjan was beaten with lathis but the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that it was not possible to say that the injuries had been caused by the present applicants in revision.

The only point raised in this application by the learned Counsel for the applicants is that the order under s. 106 of the Criminal P. C. cannot be sustained once the conviction under s. 323 was set aside and only that under s. 342 maintained by the learned Sessions Judge. The learned Counsel bases his argument on Mahomed Afzal v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1924 Lahore 311) (1) and on Lodha Ram v. King-Emperor (8 O. W. N. 1286) (2) which referred to that decision. In the Lahore case where the conviction was under s. 342, I. P. C. it was held that the offence under which persons have been convicted must be one of which a breach of the peace is in law a necessary ingredient. It is clear that a breach of the peace is not necessarily an ingredient of wrongful confinement which is punishable under s. 342 as for instance a person who is in a room might be wrongfully confined in it by some one locking him in without touching him in the slightest. Lodha Ram v. King-Emperor 8 O. W. N. 1286 (2) dealt with a conviction under s. 504 of the I. P. C., and not one under s. 342 of the I. P. C. but this Lahore case was referred to and it was pointed out that an offence punishable under s. 504 of the I. P. C. does not necessarily involve a breach of the peace though it involves an intention to provoke a breach of the public peace or knowledge that the provocation given is likely to cause a breach of the public peace. On this prior decision of this Court which is a decision of a Bench by which I am bound, one has to see not whether on the facts the persons against whom an order under s. 106 is passed did commit a breach of the peace but whether they were convicted of an offence which necessarily involves a breach of the peace. If the offence is one in which a breach of the peace may have been committed in the circumstances of the case but which in other circumstances does not necessarily involve a breach of the peace, an order under s. 106 of the Criminal P. O., cannot be passed. I am bound by the decision of the Bench, and as the learned Sessions Judge set aside the conviction under s. 323 leaving only the conviction under s. 342, I must set aside the order under s. 106.

(2) 8 O W N 1286; 135 Ind. Cas. 691; A I R 1932 Oudh 33; 33 Cr. L. J. 193; Ind. Rul. (1932) Oudh 51; (1932) Cr. Cas. 65.

I, therefore, allow the application to this extent that the order under s. 106 of the Criminal P. O., is set aside.

Plaint—Amendment—When allowed—Suit on instalment bond with default clause that on default of any one of instalments creditor would recover whole amount—Plaint stating that first two instalments were paid on due dates—Objection by defendant—Plaintiff by amendment seeking to mention real dates of payment and pleading waiver of right to sue for whole amount—Amendment held did not interfere with defendant's right to plead limitation and should be allowed—Bond—Instalment bond—Waiver—Default clause—Acceptance of overdue instalments amounts to waiver—Minor—Payment by, towards debt—Validity.

No amendment can be allowed which has the effect of depriving the defendant of any right already acquired by him or of altering the cause of action in any suit. Amendment of every other kind is permitted. An amendment which deprives the defendant of his existing right is really against the spirit of the procedure, but such an amendment must always be permitted by which the defendant's plea of limitation against the suit might entirely fall to the ground. A right which the defendant has already acquired is one thing, and a mere right to raise the plea is quite another. Confusion is apt to arise when these two entirely different ideas are mixed up. The plaintiff shall not be allowed to add any new relief by way of an amendment which on account of the efflux of time he could not claim at that time, but the plaintiff's request to plead waiver in his suit is neither a new relief nor it has the effect of depriving the defendant of any right already acquired by him. The nature of the suit is not in the least altered thereby. In fact the plaintiff is trying by this amendment to explain that his suit was within time, and such an amendment is permissible at any stage. If the plaintiff has made a mistake in stating the date of payment of money and then by amendment requests to correct the same, he by doing so is not in any way depriving the defendant of any right whatsoever which he had so far acquired. A mistake of fact of this nature can always be corrected in pleadings by any party without injuring any right of his adversary.

It would clearly be against the principle of amendment laid down in O. VI, r. 17 of the Civil P. O., to refuse an amendment in respect of a bona fide mistake regarding the mere date of any transaction. [p. 810, col. 2; p. 811, col. 2; p. 812, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed and relied on.]

A default clause contained in an instalment bond gave the plaintiffs a right to recover the whole amount in the event of failure of any one instalment. On default of the third instalment plaintiffs sued on the bond and originally stated in the plaint that the first two instalments were paid on due dates but on defendants' objection as to the dates of payment the plaintiffs sought to amend the plaint by mentioning the real dates on which both the instalments were actually received. In respect of the first instalment the due date did not coincide with the actual date of payment, therefore by way of explanation in this connection the plaintiffs pleaded that an acceptance by them of the first overdue instalment amounted to a waiver of their right to sue for the whole amount:

Held, that the plaintiffs had full right to amend the plaint and plead a waiver of their right to sue. That the amendment did not in any way interfere with the defendant's right to plead limitation. [p. 812, col. 1.]

In the case of an instalment bond with a default clause that on default of any one of the instalments the creditor would have a right to sue for the whole amount, mere acceptance by the creditor of payment of overdue instalment amounts to waiver of his right to recover the whole amount and in such a case the time does not begin to run from the date on which the instalment was due.

A minor can validly pay any amount towards his debt and such a payment towards any instalment due under an instalment bond would be a good payment to prove that the said instalment was discharged. 107 Ind. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiffs-appellants on foot of a registered bond in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhopal, who dismissed the same as time-barred. Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court and failed. Now this appeal is filed under cl. 9/1 of the Letters Patent. The plaintiffs brought a suit for Rs. 4,841 on the basis of an instalment bond dated February 8, 1930, according to which the first instalment was to be paid on April 30, 1930, and the following instalments every year on the same date. A default clause contained in the said bond gave the plaintiffs a right to recover the whole amount in the event of failure of any one instalment. The plaintiffs came to Court on May 1, 1937, with a claim of Rs. 4,841 alleging that the first instalment was paid in time and the second which fell due on April 30, 1931.

was paid on May 7, 1931. The third instalment falling due on April 30, 1932, was never paid giving the plaintiffs a right to sue for the whole amount due to him up to date. The defendants pleaded that on April 30, 1930, they never paid any thing towards the first instalment, nor did they make any payment on April 7, 1931. Therefore on the failure of the very first instalment of April 30, 1930, the plaintiffs had become entitled, according to the terms of the bond in suit, to sue for the whole amount and consequently their suit was time-barred. The plaintiffs were served with interrogatories asking the mode and place of payment of the first two instalments and whether the said payments were evidenced by their account books. Thereupon the plaintiffs admitted that the date of payment of the first instalment was incorrectly stated in their plaint as April 30, 1930, and the error was due to a mere accident. The first instalment was in fact paid on May 18, 1930, at Sehore in the following manner. Zahiruddin, defendant No. 1 handed to Madan Mohanlal, plaintiff, a cheque for Rs. 1,142-4-11 drawn on Sehore Tehsil Treasury which the said plaintiff cashed and kept only Rs. 500 towards the first instalment returning the value of Rs. 642-4-11 to the defendant. This transaction was duly entered in the plaintiffs' cash book on May 21, 1930. The second instalment was paid by the defendant on May 7, 1932, at the plaintiffs' shop and entry thereof appears to have been made in the firm's account books on the same date. The cash book was produced in evidence and both the entries were satisfactorily proved. The plaintiffs in order to remove this discrepancy applied for an amendment of their plaint with respect to the dates of payment of the first two instalments pleading further that these instalments not having been paid on due dates were accepted a few days later and by so doing the plaintiffs had clearly waived their right of suing for the whole amount. Therefore time did not begin to run against them before a default was made in respect of the third instalment. The plaintiffs also pleaded minority stating that Madan Mohanlal had attained majority on September 18, 1933, and Ratanlal on May 9, 1933, therefore their suit being brought on May 1, 1937, was within time. The learned Subordinate Judge allowed an amendment of the plaint in respect of the plea of minority but did not allow the plaintiffs to set up waiver, holding that the latter plea was an after-thought and an amendment of that nature if allowed would interfere with the rights of the defendants. This view was upheld in appeal, therefore, the plaintiffs are now before this Court. The main argument of the Court below hinges on Byash-chandra Roy v. Ajodhyanath Deb, 137 Ind. Cas. 39 (1) and it is contended that by such an amendment the plaintiffs tried to introduce fresh matter in their plaint. First of all it is to be decided whether the plaintiffs' application for amendment was rightly disallowed. The judgment relied upon by the lower Court is a single Judge ruling of the Rangoon High Court in the above mentioned case which lays down that no such amendment could be allowed as might introduce new matter into the suit whereby the defendants were deprived of the benefit of their statutory defence set up by virtue of the Lim. Act. The learned Judge has no doubt laid down a sound principle of law, but without mentioning the facts of the case the learned pronouncement does not materially help us in deciding the point in issue in the present suit. Reference has been made therein to a famous English case of Weldon v. Neal (2) in which Lord Esher has held that such an amendment could not be allowed as would prejudice the rights of the opposite party as existing at the date of that amendment. In order to explain and appreciate the underlying principle of this decision it is necessary to study the point in the light of other judgments of the various High Courts in India. It is generally accepted that no amendment can be allowed which has the effect of depriving the defendant of any right already acquired by him or of altering the cause of action in any suit. Amendment of every other kind is permitted. In Ruliaram v. Ramchander Dass (3) this principle of amendment has been fully elucidated. The plaintiff in that case had brought a pre-emption suit on the basis of contiguity, and on the defendants' pleading a similar right he sought to amend his plaint after the time for filing the suit had lapsed, basing his suit on a right of easement over the property in dispute. This amendment was disallowed simply because the cause of action was being materially altered thereby after the period of limitation for filing the suit had expired. In Bhimrao v. Gangarao (4) it was held that the plaintiff who had not originally sued for mesne profits could not after the expiry of the period of limitation add that plea by way of amendment, for the simple reason that by so doing he would deprive the defendants of a valuable objection which could be raised against that claim on the score of limitation. In Parbhudas Girdhardas Shah v. Lallubhai Khushal Mehta (5) the learned Bench disallowed an amendment of the plaint in which defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were impleaded as members of a joint Hindu family with the allegation that goods were delivered to defendant No. 1 as karta, and by way of amendment the plaintiff desired to implead all the defendants as partners of a firm who had jointly and severally been benefitted by the goods supplied. In the above mentioned cases we have seen that an amendment of plaint was disallowed because it offended against the principle decided in Weldon v. Neal (2) cited above, and in the following instances it will be noted that amendment of every other kind has been allowed with characteristic freedom of the Civil Courts. In Muthammal v. Gurusami Nayakkan (6) a pro-note executed in 1934 formed the basis of a suit brought in 1932 in which the plaintiff had alleged that a part of the debt having been paid on August 18, 1930 gave a fresh start of limitation from that date. The plaintiff during the pendency of the suit asked permission for adding a further plea that the defendant had also acknowledged liability of the debt. No date of acknowledgment was mentioned and for the sake of argument it was taken to be more than three years previous to the date of the application for amendment. Even then the learned Court saw no reason to disallow the amendment. It was held that the amendment did neither introduce a new cause of action nor was any new relief added thereby. This case is very much similar to a Bombay ruling reported in Gunnaji Bhawaji v. Makanji Khushalchand (7) in which the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint after the expiry of limitation and permitted to raise the plea of an acknowledgment by defendant and to prove the same. In Latif Husain v. Seth Gopaldas (September 28, 1936) the same principle was applied by this Court holding that the plaintiff who, in support of his claim, had produced documents written and signed by the defendants, could be permitted to prove acknowledgment of debt by the defendant even after the expiry of time for his suit. It was further held that such an amendment had no effect on the nature of the suit or on the rights already acquired by the defendant, and the Courts in order to do justice between the parties were bound to give full latitude for amendment of pleadings. The learned Privy Council in Charan Das v. Ameer Khan (8) has at least in one instance considered it just to allow even the addition of a new relief by way of amendment. Where the plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption had prayed for a mere declaration, to which s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act was a bar, the Court in second appeal had allowed the plaintiff to amend his plaint by adding a further relief for possession. The learned Privy Council fully supported this view of the learned Judicial Commissioner who had held that however carelessly the defendant's suit might have been framed, the suit was really for the enforcement of his right of pre-emption, and its cause of action would remain the same whether the relief for possession was asked or not.

An amendment which deprives the defendant of his existing right is really against the spirit of the procedure, but such an amendment must always be permitted by which the defendant's plea of limitation against the suit might entirely fall to the ground. A right which the defendant has already acquired is one thing, and a mere right to raise the plea is quite another. Confusion is apt to arise when these two entirely different ideas are mixed up. The plaintiff shall not be allowed to add any new relief by way of an amendment which on account of the afflux of time he could not claim at that time, but in the present case the plaintiffs' request to plead waiver in his suit is neither a new relief nor it has the effect of depriving the defendant of any right already acquired by him. The nature of the suit is not in the least altered thereby. In fact the plaintiff is trying by this amendment to explain that his suit was within time, and such an amendment is permissible at any stage. If the plaintiff has made a mistake in stating the date of payment of money and now requests to correct the same, he by doing so is not in any way depriving the defendant of any right whatsoever which he had so far acquired. A mistake of fact of this nature can always be corrected in pleadings by any party without injuring any right of his adversary. It would clearly be against the principle of amendment laid down in O. VI, r. 17 of the Civil P. C., to refuse an amendment in respect of a bona fide mistake regarding the mere date of any transaction. As a result of all this discussion we hold that the plaintiffs in this suit have a full right to amend the plaint and plead a waiver of their right to sue. We have therefore allowed the plaint to be amended and consequently permitted the plaintiff to argue on the point of waiver. We might also add that the real nature of the plaintiffs' amendment has not been carefully considered by the Courts below. Taking a broad view of the case it can be said that the amendment in respect of the dates of payment was never asked by the plaintiff to enable him to add a new plea of waiver. Originally the plaintiffs had stated that the first two instalments were paid on due dates but on defendants' objection as to the dates of payment the plaintiffs mentioned the real dates on which both the instalments were actually received. In respect of the first instalment the due date did not coincide with the actual date of payment, therefore by way of explanation in this connection the plaintiffs pleaded that an acceptance by them of the first overdue instalment amounted to a waiver of their right to sue for the whole amount. The amendment with regard to the date of payment of the first instalment did not in any way interfere with the defendants' right to plead limitation. It lay heavily on the plaintiffs to prove the receipt of the first instalment and on their failure to do so the defendants' plea of limitation was bound to succeed. It is evident that if the plaintiffs succeeded in proving that the first instalment was received on the due date, the defendants' plea would become futile, and again if it could be proved by the plaintiffs that the first instalment was actually received by them some time after the due date, which amounted to a waiver of their right to sue for the whole amount, the defendants position would not be affected. Now on the evidence on record we have to find whether the plaintiffs had really waived their right to sue for the whole amount or not. The plaintiffs have proved by oral and documentary evidence of a most reliable nature that defendant No. 1 had endorsed a cheque for Rs. 1,142-4-11 in favour of the plaintiffs. This cheque has been produced in Court and the endorsement thereon appears to be in the handwriting of defendant No. 1. The cash book of the plaintiffs' firm also corroborates this evidence and defendant No. 1 had not the courage to go into the witness-box to contradict the plaintiffs on this point. The lower Courts has no reason to disbelieve this fact of payment, therefore, it is established beyond doubt that the first instalment of Rs. 500 was paid by the defendants on May 18, 1930. An objection as to Madan Mohanlal's minority does not affect this payment in any manner. A minor can validly pay any amount towards his debt and such a payment towards any instalment would be a good payment to prove that the said instalment was discharged. It has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Kanayyalal v. Zalimsingh on March 23, 1939 that failure of any instalment has the effect of causing limitation to run against the whole amount on account of the provisions usually contained in a default clause occurring in simple money bonds. If, however, the plaintiffs prove that they had waived their right which accrued to him on the failure of any instalment, such a waiver must be clearly established and circumstances must be proved which lead to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had in fact waived their right. In Gopal Mal v. Firm Gopal Singh Hira Singh (9) it was held by the Lahore High Court that at the time of receiving an overdue instalment the creditor must clearly express his intention of reserving the right of suing for the whole amount otherwise mere receipt of money towards the discharge of an overdue instalment would mean that he had waived his right of suing for the whole amount. The Allahabad High Court in Maharaja of Benares v. Nandram (10) has likewise clarified this point and held that a mere receipt of an overdue instalment amounts to waiver. Such a waiver has the same significance as in the case of a zamindar; who having acquired a right to eject his tenant for non-payment of rent, accepts rent that had remained unpaid and thereby waives his right of ejectment. Similarly in Jadavchander Bakhshi v. Bharat Chander Chakrabarti (11) it has been laid down that mere abstinence from bringing a suit did not amount to waiver while on the other hand acceptance of an overdue instalment had such an effect. In short, rulings in favour of this view are not wanting, whereas there are hardly any judicial pronouncement deserving of consideration which have ruled otherwise. The Allahabad decisions contained in Ajudhia v. Kunjal (12) and Mohan Lal v. Tika Ram (13) have ceased to be good law on account of having been overruled by the later decisions of the same Court. There is also a Single Judge ruling of the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Peshawar reported in Gopi Chand v. Mohammad Umar Khan, 160 Ind. Cas. p. 134 (14) on which defendant's learned Counsel has also relied. In this judgment neither any reference has been made to the mass of case-law on the subject nor the arguments advanced are sufficiently strong to support a view which is in direct conflict with the opinions of all the superior Courts in India. We are therefore unable to deviate from the established practice of this Court, and to differ from the reasoned view taken by British Indian High Courts as mentioned above. We, therefore, hold that by accepting payment of the first instalment after its due date the plaintiffs clearly waived their right of suing for the whole amount and time against them did not begin to run from April 30, 1930. The second instalment was received on May 7, 1931 and this fact has been proved by reliable evidence on record. The plaintiffs' account books are regularly kept and the writer thereof was dead long before the present suit was instituted. Entry relating to the receipt of second instalment is clearly made and does not admit of any doubt under the circumstances. The owners of this firm were minors and business was carried on on their behalf by their certificated guardian who could not be suspected of having made any false entry. The defendants have not attempted to prove otherwise nor have they even specifically denied payment of any of these instalments. Second instalment having thus been paid and received did not cause limitation to run even in 1931. When the third instalment fell due in 1932 and was not paid, time did begin to run against the whole amount and the present suit was brought well within the period of limitation.

As regards the plea of the plaintiffs' minority, the learned Judge held that the plaintiff No. 1 came of age on December 18, 1933, and could bring the present suit within three years from that date. We have held that time began to run on the failure of the third instalment from April 30, 1932, therefore the present suit which was brought on May 1, 1937, was clearly within the statutory period of limitation. No question of plaintiffs' minority could therefore arise under these circumstances. Defendant No. 2 has been impleaded in her capacity as surety. Her only objection to the plaintiffs' suit was based on the plea of limitation, which, as has already been decided, has fallen to the ground. The suit against both the defendants is clearly within time and the surety is as much bound by the decree as the principal debtor, therefore, it is ordered that the plaintiffs appeal be accepted and the claim for Rs. 4,841 be decreed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with joint and several liability. Costs of this Court and the Courts below shall be paid by the defendants respondents to the plaintiffs-appellants.

DHANESHWAR NATH TEWARI—

versus

GHANSHYAM DHAR MISRA—RESPONDENT
Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151,
O. XXXIX—Power of Court to pass temporary injunction for preservation of property in respect of which person has filed plaint and has applied for leave to sue as pauper.

Apart altogether from O. XXXIX of the Code, the Court has ample jurisdiction to pass an order providing for the protection and security of the property which is the subject-matter of the litigation. It can pass a temporary injunction for the preservation of property in respect of which a person has filed a plaint and has applied for leave to sue as pauper. 55

Ind. Cas. 403 (2), relied on.
[Case-law referred to]

F. A. from the order of the Civil Judge, Gorakhpur, dated June 2, 1938.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and K. B. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sankar Saran for the Respondent.

Verma, J.—This is an appeal against an order directing a temporary injunction to issue against the appellant restraining him "from transferring the properties in dispute except so far as may be necessary for ordinary enjoyment of the same," and restraining him "from receiving the amounts in dispute from the post office and the Court of Wards till August 6, 1938" which date was fixed for hearing the objections of the Post Office and the Court of Wards to whom notices were directed to issue.

The matter has arisen thus. One Nath Prakash Dhar Misra died some years ago leaving him surviving a widow Mst. Moharmani Kunwari. Nath Prakash Dhar Misra seems to have been possessed of considerable property, movable and immovable. His widow died on August 23, 1935. The respondent, Ghanshyam Dhar Misra, on April 28, 1938, presented a plaint in the Court of the Civil Judge of Gorakhpur claiming the property left by Nath Prakash Dhar Misra on the allegation that he was the reversioner and that the succession had opened to him on August 23, 1935, when Mst. Moharmani Kunwar died. Ghanshyam Dhar Misra alleged that he was a pauper and was unable to pay the court-fee prescribed by the law on the plaint and prayed for leave to sue as a pauper. On May 30, 1938, Ghanshyam Dhar Misra presented an application praying that an injunction be issued to the appellant restraining him from damaging or alienating and removing the properties in suit and from doing various other things. The appellant is named in the plaint as defendant No. 1, and it is averred by Ghanshyam Das Misra that defendant No. 1 has without any right and title taken possession of the estate of Nath Prakash Dhar Misra on the false allegation that he is an adopted son of Nath Prakash Dhar. He has also alleged that the appellant was anxious to alienate the properties and to remove and appropriate the movables and the cash. This application for an injunction being issued to the appellant was taken up for hearing by the Court below before the question of the plaintiff's pauperism had been decided. The application was contested by the appellant. He did not however file any written reply to the application of the respondent dated May 30, 1938. The main objection which seems to have been taken by the appellant before the Court below was that as the question of pauperism had not yet been decided the application was not maintainable. The Court below has overruled this objection and has passed the order mentioned above.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has referred to the provisions of O. XXXIX, Civil P. C., and has urged that there must be a 'suit' before the Court can have jurisdiction to issue an injunction. His contention is that until the application for leave to sue as a pauper has been granted, or the necessary court-fee has been paid by the respondent on his plaint, there is no suit. It has, on the other hand, been argued by the learned Counsel for the respondent that the Court below had jurisdiction to pass the order complained of at the stage at which the proceedings were in the Court below when that order was passed. The question that has been raised is not free from difficulty. The word 'suit' has not been defined in the Code. Order XXXIII, r. 1 lays down that "any suit may be instituted by a pauper" subject to the provisions which follow. Rule 2 of that Order directs that "every application for permission to sue as a pauper shall contain the particulars required in regard to plaints in suits...and it shall be signed and verified in the manner prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings."

It is provided by r. 8 that

"Where the application is granted it shall be numbered and registered and it shall be deemed the plaint in the suit and the suit shall proceed in all other respects as a suit instituted in the ordinary manner except that the plaintiff shall not be liable to pay any court-fee"

On the one hand, it is clear that when the application is so numbered and registered, the suit shall be deemed to have been instituted on the date on which the application for leave to sue as a pauper was presented. On the other, the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant that until the application has been granted and has been numbered and registered, there is strictly speaking, no regular 'suit' is not quite without force. We do not however consider it necessary to express any opinion on the question whether there was or was not a 'suit' before the Court below on the date on which the order appealed against was passed. The Court below does not purport to have acted under O. XXXIX. It has been urged on behalf of the respondent that the Court below has really passed the order in question in the exercise of its inherent powers under s. 151 of the Code. It is not necessary to consider the question whether in these circumstances an appeal lies to this Court against the order of the Court below and whether it would not be more appropriate to treat the appeal as a petition for revision for, having heard learned Counsel, we have come to the conclusion that no sufficient grounds have been made out for interference with the order of the Court below, whether we treat the petition of the appellant as an appeal or as a revision.

It seems to us that, apart altogether from O. XXXIX of the Code, the Court below had ample jurisdiction to pass an order providing for the protection and security of the property which is the subject-matter of the litigation. It has been held in this Court that the Civil P. C., is not exhaustive: Durga Dehal Das v. Anoraji (1), at p. 31. This view has been followed in the other High Courts. The Courts have therefore in many cases, where the circumstances require it, to proceed upon the assumption of the possession of inherent power to act ex debito iustitiæ and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone they exist. It is obvious that the law cannot make express provisions against all contingencies, and it has therefore been held that it is the duty of the Court to apply the provisions of the law not only to what appears to be regulated by them expressly but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made and which appear to be comprehended either within the express sense of the law or within the consequences that may be gathered from it. This topic has been the subject of numerous decisions given in cases arising out of a variety of circumstances. So far as this question of the power to issue temporary injunctions is concerned, we would refer to the decision of the High Court at Lahore in Manohar Lal Mahabir Pershad v. Jainarain Babu Lal (2). Reference is made in the judgment of that case to the decision of Calcutta High Court in Hukum Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (3). The observations of Woodroffe, J., at p. 930 et seq and Mookerjee at p. 910 et seq, are in point. We need only quote this observation of Woodroffe, J.

"For my part I am always slow to believe that the Court's powers are unequal to its desire to order that which it believes to be just."

The Lahore High Court has consistently followed the rule laid down in Manohar Lal Mahabir Pershad v. Jainarain Babu Lal (2), mentioned above: vide Kanshi Ram v. Sharfdin (4), and New Delhi Theatres Ltd. v. Kailas Chand (5). The Madras High Court, on the other hand, is inclined to the view that unless the matter comes strictly within the provisions laid down in O. XXXIX, of the Code, a Court has no power to issue an injunction: Varadacharlu v. Narasimha Charlu (6), and Ayyamperumal Nadar v. Muthuswami Pillai (7). They are both decisions of single Judges. It is to be noted however that in both of these cases the question that arose for decision was whether the Court should have granted an injunction restraining the execution of a decree passed by a competent Court. Reference has also been made to the case in Periakaruppan Chettiar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (8), which is a Bench decision. But the question which arose for decision in that case was whether a subordinate Court in British India has power to restrain by injunction a party from prosecuting a suit in a foreign Court, and it was observed that it was doubtful whether such a power existed. So far as this Court is concerned, only three cases have been cited. One of them is Muhammad Inam-ullah Khan v. Narain Das (9). It was assumed there that "it was intended to give the Court powers outside the orders and rules in exceptional cases," and the case was decided on the merits and it was held that on the facts the order could not be justified. The other case is that in Harnand Lal v. Chaturbhuj (10). An interpretation of a far-reaching character was placed on s. 151 in that case. The principle underlying the decision of Mahmood, J., in Beni Prasad v. Gomta Kuar (11) is in favour of the view that the Court below had the power to grant the injunction. It would thus appear that there is no case in this Court which runs counter to the decisions of the High Court at Lahore which support the contention put forward by the respondent. Apart from the Madras cases mentioned above, no authority has been cited in support of the proposition that the Court below was powerless to pass such orders as it considered necessary for the preservation of the property in respect of which the respondent had filed a plaint and had applied for leave to sue as a pauper, and which in the opinion of the Court below were necessary in the interests of justice. We agree with the view that has been taken in Lahore. In our opinion, therefore, the Court below had jurisdiction to make the order complained of.

On the merits it has been suggested that the order restraining the appellant from receiving the money which the Bettiah Court of Wards pays periodically would operate harshly against him. No materials have however been placed before us to show that the decision of the Court below is wrong. As stated above, the appellant did not even file a written reply to the application of the respondent, who had not only filed a written application stating facts which, according to him, entitled him to the injunction claimed, but had also filed an affidavit in support of that application. The position, thus is that the allegations made by the respondent in his application and affidavit have not been controverted. Consequently it is not possible for us to say that the Court below was wrong. We cannot therefore interfere. We have no doubt however that if the appellant applies to the Court below for a modification of the order with regard to the payments by the Bettiah Court of Wards, the Court below will give to the application such consideration as it deserves. For the foregoing reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

RAMUDU AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Debts—Father—Mortgage of ancestral land—Suit against father—Sons not impleaded—Father dying after preliminary decree—Sons brought

The pious duty of a son which makes him liable to pay his father's debt assumes the existence of certain debts which have to be paid. The question of illegality or immorality would only arise when the debts were in fact incurred. It is only when a debt is proved to exist and found not to have been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, that the father could be said to have been sued in a representative capacity. So where in a suit against father on mortgage of ancestral property the sons are not impleaded but are brought on record after the death of the father after the passing of the preliminary decree and are not allowed to raise the question regarding alienability of the mortgaged property and binding nature of the debt, the sons, in a separate suit, are not precluded from disputing the existence of debt itself.

[Case-law referred to.]

Section 53, Civil P. O., assumes the existence of a debt and declares in effect that the property which was liable under Hindu Law for payment for a debt incurred by the ancestor would, despite his death, continue to remain liable in the hands of his descendant as his legal representative. It was not meant to deprive the descendant of his right to contest the existence of the debt where he was in danger of losing the whole of his ancestral property. There is no provision in the section that the entire property belonging to a joint family of which the father was karta, would be necessarily liable for payment of debts incurred by him.

Since the objection that a certain suit is barred under s. 47, Civil P. O., is purely a question of law, it can be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal even if it was not raised in written statement.

Section 47, applies to matters which arise after a decree has been passed and not to those which were in existence even at the time when the suit was instituted. If objections regarding the correctness or the validity of a decree are raised by a person who was a party to the suit or by one who must be deemed to have been a party, these will be barred not by s. 47, but by some other provision of law. If, on the other hand, these are being raised by a third party and are of a nature which go to the root of the matter and attack the decree itself, they could not be gone into in execution proceedings for the simple reason that an execution Court cannot be asked to go behind the decree. If persons who were no parties to the suit on mortgage against father and who have been already found not to be represented by their father, desire to challenge the decree or the mortgage on the basis of which the decree was passed, they cannot do so in execution proceedings. 62 Ind. Cas. 905 (17), dissented from. T. Sundarappa v. B. Sreeramulu (18) and 15 Ind. Cas. 25 (19), relied on.

Article 12, Lim. Act, would apply only if the sale is held to be binding on the plaintiffs. If the plaintiff's interest is, on the other hand, found not to have been sold or the sale is held to be void against them, this Article cannot be permitted to stand in their way and they will be entitled to the relief claimed by them. Where the debt by the father is found not to have been due or to have been incurred for purposes which were immoral or illegal, a decree obtained in respect of such a transaction would not bind the sons and the sale held in execution could not be held to be binding on them so as to necessitate a prayer for setting it aside particularly when the property was purchased by either the decree-holder himself or even by a stranger having knowledge of the circumstances in which the debt was contracted. Article 12 has no application to such a case. 34 Ind. Cas. 288 (20), distinguished. 98 Ind. Cas. 31 (21), dissented from.

Where the lands were granted to the plaintiff's ancestors by way of desabandam inam and the burden of keeping the tank, apparently an irrigation source, in repair was transferred to the inamdar, an alienation of such an inam is against public policy and void. 153 Ind. Cas. 817 (1), 163 Ind. Cas. 724 (2), 70 Ind. Cas. 466 (3) and 162 Ind. Cas. 1008 (4), relied on. [p. 818, col. 1.]

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge Salem in O. S. No. 40 of 1932.

Mr. N. Sivaramakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

Abdur Rahman, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. It arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of several items of property sold in execution of a decree passed on the basis of a mortgage deed executed by the plaintiff's father, Appanna, and their cousin, defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2. The facts which have contributed to the present litigation may be briefly stated. It appears that defendant No. 2 claimed to have purchased the jaghir of Mugalapalli in a Court auction and to have obtained possession of the same in 1904. Relying on his purchase he called upon Appanna and defendant No. 1 to maintain the Mugalapalli tank in good condition and to effect necessary repairs, a service which they were bound to render in terms of desabandam inam granted to their ancestors. This, according to defendant No. 2 they had failed to perform and the inam was consequently resumed by defendant No. 2 in 1907 and a ryotwari patta issued. Having done this, defendant No. 2 instituted several suits for the recovery of rent in Revenue Courts and obtained decrees. In consideration of these decrees which amounted to Rs. 600 in 1915 and of a further sum of Rs. 200 stated to have been advanced to Appanna and defendant No. 1, a mortgage deed comprising lands granted to Appanna's ancestors by way of desabandam inam and some other ancestral properties was executed by them in favour of defendant No. 2. This was followed by a suit (O. S. No. 38 of 1916) (O. S. No. 21 of 1919) instituted on behalf of Appanna and defendant No. 1 praying for a declaration to the effect that the desabandam inam lands were held by them free of rent and their resumption by defendant No. 2 was ineffectual. They had also asked for a declaration that the decrees for rent, passed by the Revenue Courts, were invalid on account of fraud.

The Subordinate Judge of Salem who had tried the suit decreed the claim on December 20, 1920 (Ex. C) to a large extent. He held that defendant No. 2 was not a jaghir and was not entitled to resume the desabandam inam granted to the plaintiff's ancestors. The decrees by the Revenue Courts were however not found to have been obtained by fraud and were not declared to be invalid. Ignoring the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Salem, defendant No. 2 instituted a suit for sale on the basis of his mortgage (O. S. No. 101 of 1922) against Appanna and defendant No. 1 but they failed to appear and contest it. An ex parte preliminary decree was therefore passed. Appanna died shortly after and his sons, the present plaintiffs, were brought on the record as his legal representatives. They tried to attack the mortgage deed and question the alienability of the inam lands in these proceedings but were not permitted so to do. A final decree was consequently passed in terms of the preliminary decree and the properties covered by the mortgage deed were brought to sale in execution in 1927 and purchased by defendant No. 2 himself. He succeeded in obtaining possession of the same in September 1929. Having been thus dispossessed, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit. Two schedules were attached to the plaint. Sch. A comprised properties which were claimed to have been granted as desabandam inam and Sch. B contained properties which were alleged to be ancestral. The alienation of these properties effected by their father and cousin, defendant No. 1, by way of mortgage in 1915 and their subsequent sale were challenged in the plaint as void and inoperative. The mortgage deed executed by Appanna and defendant No. 1 was also attacked as invalid for want of consideration. The validity of the mortgage deed was also impugned on the ground of coercion as it was alleged to have been secured at the time when Appanna and defendant No. 1 were under arrest in consequence of a warrant issued at the instance of defendant No. 2 in execution of his decree passed by the Revenue Court.

Defendant No. 2 denied these allegations and contended that the mortgage deed was for consideration, valid and binding and that the plaintiffs who were represented by their father and impleaded in the mortgage suit, were not entitled to raise the question of its validity or that of the sale. It was also alleged that the suit was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge in a judgment, which is very perfunctory and has been of no use to us in deciding this appeal, held the mortgage to be for consideration and the decree in O. S. No. 101 of 1922 to be binding on the present plaintiffs. The alienation of the inam lands comprised in Sch. A was not held to be void and that of the properties described in Sch. B, although found to be ancestral was held to be justified and binding. The suit was also found to be barred by Art. 12, Lim. Act. It was therefore dismissed. The plaintiffs appeal. The first question which has to be determined in this appeal is whether the mortgage of 1915 and the sale in execution are binding on the plaintiffs, being in respect of properties which were alienable in character and for a valid consideration.

As stated above the mortgaged properties consisted of inam lands and ancestral property. So far as inam lands are concerned, the question depends on the nature of the grant under which they were granted to the plaintiff's ancestors. If the grant were made for public service or for purposes of public utility, it could not have been assigned for the simple reason that its assignment would defeat the object for which it was granted. The lands comprised in Sch. A were, as the certified copy of the inam title deed (Ex. A) would show granted to the plaintiff's ancestors by way of desabandam inam and the burden of keeping the tank, apparently an irrigation source, in repair was transferred to the inamdar. That an alienation of such an inam is against public policy and void admits of no doubt and is concluded by authority: see Scora Ramakrishnamma v. Pasumarihi Venkotasubbrah (1), Ramanathan Chettiar v. Kalidas Karondan (2), Anjaneyalu v.

Sri Venugopala Rice Mills Ltd. (3), and Gokavarapu Swami v. Manda Sateyya (4). The learned Subordinate Judge has overruled the plaintiffs' contention in a few words by saying that since the alienation of a village inam was valid during the lifetime of the alienors, it could not be set aside at the plaintiffs' instance. How he could have held it to be so when he had admitted in the preceding sentence of his judgment that an inam of this kind was inalienable is incomprehensible. Moreover he lost sight of the fact that the mortgage was created by the plaintiffs' father who had died and not by the plaintiffs themselves.

In view of the decided cases Mr. Ramakrishna Iyer, learned Counsel for the respondent, was unable to support the lower Court's judgment in this respect. We must therefore hold that both the mortgage of the properties described in Sch. A and their sale in the execution of the decree were a nullity and must be disregarded.

This was however not the only objection raised against the alienations. The binding character of the mortgage deed was also questioned on behalf of the plaintiffs on the ground that it was not supported by any legal consideration. It might have been unnecessary to go into this question, if all the properties comprised in the mortgage deed were service tenure lands. But the decision of this question has become necessary as the properties mentioned in the 'B' Schedule were claimed by the plaintiffs and have been found by the lower Court to be ancestral. This finding was not challenged before us by the learned Counsel for the respondent. We must therefore now consider the question if there was a legal consideration for the mortgage deed executed by the plaintiffs' father and defendant No. 1. The consideration for this mortgage was said to consist of a sum of Rs. 600 which was alleged to have been due to defendant No. 2 on account of certain rents due to him after the inam rights were attempted to have been resumed by him. It is true that defendant No. 2 had secured decrees in Revenue Courts for this amount but in the view of the finding in O. S. No. 38 of 1916 that the lands were held by the plaintiffs' father and defendant No. 1 as rent free and defendant No. 2 was not legally entitled to resume them or charge any rent therefor it must be held that the same could not have formed a valid consideration for the mortgage deed. Let us now examine if the balance of Rs. 200 was paid to the mortgagors at the time when his mortgage deed was executed. The statement made by D. W. No. 1, who happens to be a grandson of defendant No. 2, makes it clear that this sum of Rs. 200 was not advanced to Appanna and defendant No. 1 in cash but was taken into account to quote his words "for effecting repairs to the tank and for expenses of the criminal case." There is no evidence on the record that any money was spent by or on behalf of defendant No. 2 in effecting repairs to the tank or that he was entitled to do so on behalf of the mortgagors. Nor do the mortgagors appear to be liable for the expenses of any criminal case filed against them by defendant No. 2. The only criminal case in regard to which a copy has been produced on behalf of defendant No. 2 (Ex. 2) was filed in 1907. The suggestion apparently is that the expenses incurred by defendant No. 2 in filing and prosecuting this complaint were recovered in the manner from the mortgagors. But were they liable to pay them? Even if the facts were otherwise defendant No. 2, although he might have been held entitled to recover the value of 50 cocoanuts which were alleged to have been stolen by defendant No. 1 in tort from him he could not be justified in recovering the costs incurred for filing the complaint and conducting the prosecution which resulted in defendant No. 1's conviction. But when the facts of this case, as disclosed by the judgment (Ex. 2), were looked into it transpired that these cocoanuts were growing on the inam land which defendant No. 2 was trying to resume and which Appanna and defendant No. 1 were trying to resist. It was found, as stated above in O. S. No. 38 of 1916, that defendant No. 2's action was wholly unjustified. In view of that finding it is impossible to hold that these expenses could have been either legally or justly recovered from Appanna who was no party to the complaint or from defendant No. 1 who was.

It was impossible for us to overlook the circumstance that shortly before the execution of the mortgage deed a warrant for defendant No. 1's arrest was issued by the Sub-Collector, Hosur, in the execution of the decree for rent passed in defendant No. 2's favour (Ex. B). Looking at the variety of ways in which Appanna and defendant No. 1 were being harassed by defendant No. 2 who was apparently a man of influence and means, it is not surprising to find that he did succeed in getting the mortgage deed executed in his favour from these helpless persons. In the circumstances it is unnecessary to give a finding whether the mortgage deed was vitiated by coercion; but we cannot but hold that there was absolutely no consideration for the mortgage deed executed by Appanna and defendant No. 1 and the same must be held to be not binding on the present plaintiffs. The question then is if the decree passed on the basis of the mortgage is binding on the plaintiffs. They were not impleaded when the suit was instituted and were brought on the record as legal representatives of their father after the preliminary decree had been passed against him. They tried to raise the questions regarding the alienability of the property mortgaged and the binding nature of the debt but were not permitted to do so. This course was adopted by the Court on account of the provisions contained in O. XXII, r. 4 (2), Civil P. O. It may be that for certain purposes the suit might be deemed to have been pending and not disposed of until a final decree was passed but there is no doubt that the whole of the trial had come to an end and the points which the present plaintiffs wished to raise then could not have been gone into at that stage. Moreover the defences which they wished to raise were not such as to be called appropriate to their character as Appanna's legal representatives. They could not have assailed the decree which had been passed against their father during his life-time. It would therefore follow that the decree cannot be held to be binding on them in their individual capacity in which the present suit was brought.

It has been contended however that, although it might have been possible for the plaintiffs to institute a suit on account of the transaction being immoral or illegal (a proposition which the learned Counsel for the respondent appeared to contest later and which will have to be examined subsequently) the mortgage cannot be impugned by the plaintiffs for want of consideration particularly when they had been impleaded before the final decree was passed. We have already tried to show that the fact of the plaintiffs having been impleaded after the preliminary decree had been passed could not have debarred them from raising it in a separate suit. But the argument is that although the father might have been debarred from raising a question of his immorality or illegality, yet he was not debarred from raising the question of the want of consideration and as a decree, either ex parte or otherwise, was passed against Appanna, it was no longer open to his sons, the present appellants, to contest that there was no consideration for the mortgage deed. Had the decree not been passed against the father who occupied a special position as a karta of joint Hindu family with regard to his sons, the answer would have been simple enough. But the contention is that a Hindu father represents his sons even when they have not been impleaded so far as the factum of the debt is concerned and that they cannot dispute the existence of the debt after the decree had been passed against their father. The contention is in our opinion unsound and must be repelled. It assumes in the first instance that the father was sued in a representative capacity.

We do not see any reason why the father should be held to have represented his sons in any greater degree in regard to the factum of the debt than he could have done in case the debt had been attacked as immoral or illegal. We are not concerned here with what the father could or could not have done, but with how far are the sons to be bound by his action or inaction? The question is not how far was the father liable for the debts which he might have incurred or acknowledged but the question is how far are his sons liable? They cannot be held to be so unless it is shown that the father was being sued in a representative capacity. In the absence of an express declaration that he was being sued in that capacity, this can only be established by proving that a debt existed in point of fact. The sons, it must be remembered, were no parties to the action. If the sons are not allowed to question the existence of the debt in a subsequent suit how and when would it be possible for them to contend that the debt was never actually incurred by their father? We are not concerned here with the question of onus of proof but with the question if a plea denying the existence of a debt is available to the sons. It is only after the debt has been proved to exist and found not to have been immoral or illegal that the father could be said to have been sued in a representative capacity. As long as these questions remain undecided, in spite of the challenge by the sons, it cannot be said that the father had been sued in a representative capacity. It must not be forgotten that the sons are not being proceeded against as heirs of their father but their own share of the property which belonged to them even when their father was alive is also in danger of being lost.

In view of s. 53, Civil P. O., they may not be able to contend that their father's share is not liable or that it devolved on them on his death as survivors, but by what rule of law may one well ask are they debarred from contending that the decree was not passed against their father in a representative capacity and did not bind them? Is the case to be decided against them without giving them even one opportunity of questioning the transaction if they wished to contest it? The pious duty of a son which makes him liable to pay his father's debt assumes the existence of certain debts which have to be paid. The question of illegality or immorality would only arise when the debts were in fact incurred. If the debts were found not to be due it would be impossible to contend that the sons were liable to discharge what was not really a liability of their father. The power of a Hindu father is limited when he is dealing with ancestral property or when he is doing something by which the son's rights in the ancestral property may be affected. If a father mortgages a property to another person in consideration of a debt which does not exist, the mortgage would be more or less in the nature of a gift. It cannot be contested that the father is incapable of making gifts of ancestral property except in very special circumstances and to a very limited extent. If a decree is subsequently passed against the father on the basis of such a mortgage and the property sold in execution of that decree and the sons have no right to show in, what must in the nature of things be a separate suit, that they had rights in the property which could not have been alienated by their father, they must be held to have been extinguished on the ground that their father was competent to make a gift of their share in the property as well. We hope this is not the law and we are convinced that it is not so.

This question has been considered in a number of cases. The first case to which reference may be made is that in Ramasamayyan v. Virasami Iyer (5), where (5) 21 M 222; 8 M L J 126.

Shepherd, J., observed as follows :

"It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the only question which the son of a Hindu debtor can raise is as to the nature of the debt, and that he cannot question the existence of a debt which forms the foundation of a decree against his father. According to this contention it would be open to the father by confessing judgment to procure by indirect means the sale of the entire estate when he could not lawfully alienate it by a voluntary conveyance. The limitation which is imposed by Hindu Law on the father's power of alienation would become illusory.

But this is clearly not the law. Whether the sale is a voluntary or an enforced sale, its validity depends upon the existence of a just debt in satisfaction of which the sale is effected."

This was followed by another in Ramasami Nadan v. Ulaganatha Goundan (6), in which similar observations are to be found in the judgments written by no less eminent Judges than Subramania Ayyar, J. and Benson, J. at pp. 66 and 67 of the report. The same view was taken in Thiruvankata Mudaliar v. Muthu Iyer (7), Malayandi v. Subbaraya (8), Bhagwant v. Tursi Ram, 51 Ind. Cas. 130 (9), Kasturi Mal v. Lajja Ram, 60 Ind. Cas. 751 (10), Beni Pershad v. Pura Chand (11). An observation made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (12), also shows that a plea of this nature was available to the sons. It would have been unnecessary to discuss this point in such detail, had it not been for an observation in Edn. 10 of Mayne's Hindu Law (in the note at p. 431) where it has been observed by the learned Editor that in a suit upon a debt against the father he represents the sons when they are not made parties so far as the factum of the debt is concerned and the judgment against the father itself creates a debt. A number of cases have been cited for this proposition but we have not been able to find any observation in these cases that such a plea is not open to the son. It is true that a statement is to be found in most of them that the only defences open to the sons are those of immorality or illegality but there is no specific reference that the son is not entitled to question the existence of the debt itself. In the absence of clear decision we cannot hold that the learned Judges were laying down the law differently. The only decision out of the cases cited which discusses the point is the one reported in Indar Pal v. Imperial Bank (13). This does not support the contention for which it has been cited. Indeed, it contains an observation to the contrary at p. 218 of the report. The dictum by that eminent Judge, Bashyam Ayyangar, J., in Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar (14), to the effect that the judgment against the father creates a debt was not really necessary for the disposal of that case and does not need to be examined here when we find s. 53 added to the Civil P. O., to surmount the difficulties of a father's creditors in realizing their decree out of the properties which had devolved on the sons by the rule of survivorship. We are aware that in this and other cases like Mohan Lal v. Bala Prasad (15), Abdul Karim v. Ram Kishore (16) it has been observed by the learned Judges that the only defences open to the son were those of illegality or immorality. But having gone through the judgments we are of opinion that it was more or less assumed by them that the debts existed in point of fact and it was therefore unnecessary for them to state in view of that assumption that the son could also challenge the factum of the debt. With great respect to the learned Editor we cannot agree with him that the sons cannot dispute the father's liability except in respect of the nature of the debt regarding which the father could not represent the sons. There appears to be no reason to hold why he should be held to be representing the sons in regard to the factum of debt.

The next contention raised by Mr. Ramakrishna Iyer was that after the addition of s. 53 to Civil P. O., it would not be possible for a son or other descendant, whether he had been impleaded in the suit or not, to object to the sale of the property held in execution of a decree passed for debts incurred by his deceased ancestor. There is no doubt that the property in the descendant's hands would be, for the purposes mentioned in the section, deemed to be the property of the deceased ancestor and the son or other descendant must be, in spite of the rule of survivorship, regarded to be a legal representative; but it must not be overlooked that the section assumes the existence of a debt and declares in effect that the property which was liable under Hindu Law for payment for a debt incurred by the ancestor would, despite his death, continue to remain liable in the hands of his descendant as his legal representative. The ancestor's death could not have the result of improving a creditor's position. The section was enacted to take away a possible plea by the descendant that the property held by his ancestor during his lifetime had devolved on the former by survivorship and was not liable for the payment of the latter's debts. At the same time it was not meant to deprive the descendant of his right to contest the existence of the debt where he was in danger of losing the whole of his ancestral property. There is no provision in s. 53, Civil P. O., that the entire property belonging to a joint family of which the father was karta, would be necessarily liable for payment of debts incurred by him. The question would depend for its answer on the application of principles contained in Hindu Law. If in a given case, the debt taken by a father is found to have been incurred for purposes and objects binding on the whole of the family of which he is the head or even for his own personal benefit provided it was not for an immoral or illegal purpose, the entire coparcenary property in his son's or other descendant's hand would, according to those principles, be liable for payment. This is due to the fact that the debt was contracted by the father either in the capacity as manager and head of the family for family purposes in which case the descendants must have had its advantage or at least be assumed to have had it or even when it was done for the father's own personal benefit, the obligation of religion and piety makes them liable to discharge the same. In these circumstances the family property would be taken to have devolved on the descendants as legal representatives and it would be useless for them to plead that the property did not belong to their ancestor or that as joint tenants they had an interest in the property which could not have been burdened, or alienated by their ancestor. But if the debt did not exist in fact or it was illegal or immoral and the property has not been purchased by a stranger, they could raise these questions and if they succeeded in establishing their contentions or rather if these contentions were found in their favour, their shares in the joint family property would not be taken to have devolved on them in their capacity as legal representatives and would not be liable to be sold and could be even if sold recovered by them. Briefly speaking, these principles have been imported into s. 53, Civil P. O., by the words "which is liable under Hindu Law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor." But we do not find any provision in this or any other section of the Code which may justify us to hold that the descendant's right to contest the existence of the debt or the illegality and immorality of its character has been taken away even when they were not impleaded in the suit and had no occasion to challenge the debt or alienation contracted or made by their ancestor and to show that he had not represented them in the suit.

The property in Appanna's hands which was mortgaged by him has been found to be ancestral property and the debt in respect of which it was mortgaged held to be non-existent and in any case not binding on the present plaintiffs. The mortgage and the sale in execution must therefore be held not to have passed their interests in the property. Appanna's share however which he had in the properties before his death stands on a different footing. He had mortgaged the property himself and had allowed a decree for sale to be passed against himself without contesting it. So far as his share is concerned, it must be deemed to be Appanna's property and to have been held by the plaintiffs in their capacity as his legal representatives.

It was next contended by Mr. Ramakrishna Iyer that these pleas, if available at all to the plaintiffs, should have been taken by them in execution proceedings particularly when the sons were impleaded as legal representatives of their father before the final decree had been passed, and that a separate suit was barred under the provisions of s. 47, Civil P. O. For this contention reliance was placed on a case reported in Shank Karoo v. Rameshwar Rao (17). This objection was not taken in the written statement and has been taken before us for the first time. Since this is purely a question of law, we have permitted it to be argued here. A short answer to this contention is that s. 47, Civil P. O., applies to matters which arise after a decree has been passed and not to those which were in existence even at the time when the suit was instituted. If objections regarding the correctness or the validity of a decree are raised by a person who was a party to the suit or by one who must be deemed to have been a party, these will be barred not by s. 47, Civil P. C., but by some other provision of law which we need not pause to consider here. If, on the other hand, these are being raised by a third party and are of a nature which go to the root of the matter and attack the decree itself, they could not be gone into in execution proceedings for the simple reason that an execution Court cannot be asked to go behind the decree. Section 47, Civil P. C., provides that questions relating to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. If persons who were no parties to the suit and who have been already found not to be represented by their father, desire to challenge the decree or the mortgage on the basis of which the decree was passed, they could not do so in execution proceedings. In fact the plaintiffs tried to raise these contentions, which they have now made in the present suit as soon as they were impleaded as legal representatives of their father. The Court which had passed the preliminary decree was prepared to go into these matters to a certain extent. But on an appeal preferred by defendant No. 2 (Appeal Suit No. 61 of 1924) the District Judge of Salem set aside the order and made the following remarks :

"The mortgage money not having been paid within the time prescribed by the preliminary decree the appellant applied for a final decree; but his application was opposed not only by defendant No. 1 but also by the sons of the deceased defendant No. 2 who had been brought on the record as his legal representatives. The lower Court has observed that defendants Nos. 4 to 6, i. e., the legal representatives of defendant No. 2 attacked the hypothecation bond and the preliminary decree in toto but that at the hearing of the application the main contention of these defendants was that out of the seven items of the property covered by the hypothecation bond and the preliminary decree, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 were service inam lands and consequently inalienable. It is perfectly obvious that these defendants were not entitled to attack the hypothecation bond or the preliminary decree and the contention which the lower Court did permit them to put forward amounted substantially to a claim that they had a title independent of that of the mortgagors. Such a contention would certainly have been outside the scope of a mortgage suit at any stage. In dealing with an application under O. XXXIV, r. 5, the only question which the Court has to consider is whether the mortgage money has been paid. If it has not, the Court is bound to give the applicant a final decree in terms of the preliminary decree already passed. What the Court orders to be sold is the right, title and interest of the mortgagors in the hypothecated property; and it is not the business of the Court in a mortgage suit to inquire into the nature of the right, title and interest at the instance of any claimants or for the benefit of possible purchasers. In modification therefore of the final decree passed by the lower Court I direct that the appellant be given a final decree in the terms of the preliminary decree passed by the lower Court."

In view of what was contended on behalf of defendant No. 2 in the above appeal, he should be held to be precluded from taking this objection in this Court. But even if we do not rest our decision on this ground, we must hold that the grounds raised by the plaintiffs in the suit do not fall within the ambit of s. 47, Civil P. C., and could not have been inquired into by the executing Court. As for the Patna decision in Shaik Karoo v. Rameshwar Rao (17) it is true that it does take the view that a separate suit for the determination of the liability of the sons for the debt covered by the decree passed against their father would be barred by s. 47, Civil P. C. But this decision was based on the construction placed on s. 53, Civil P. C., which has been considered by us to some extent in an earlier portion of this judgment, and is based on the assumption that the sons had no independent rights in the property and were represented by their father in the suit. There appears to be no warrant for holding that a processual amendment in the Civil P. C., was meant to deprive the Hindu sons of their rights in the property or to increase the representative capacity of the father to an extent not authorized by Hindu Law.

When the sons attack the decree on the ground that the debt did not exist or that it was immoral they are attacking the validity of the decree so far as they are concerned and the liability of the ancestral property to be sold in execution. Both these questions are interdependent and one cannot be decided without the other. If the debt did exist and was of a nature which could have been incurred by the father so as to make it a pious duty of the sons to discharge, the ancestral property would be liable to be sold and not otherwise. As stated above, a person cannot be permitted to attack the validity of the decree in execution proceedings—except in cases where it has been passed against a dead person and is an absolute nullity. If the execution Court cannot be asked to go behind and question the validity of the decree the question of the liability of the property which is mixed up with the first question cannot also be decided in execution. It was not possible for the plaintiffs to make an application under O. XXI, r. 58 firstly because it was a mortgage decree and secondly because they were impugning the mortgage effected by their father and the validity of the decree passed on the basis of that mortgage.

We must, therefore, although with great deference, disagree with the view expressed in the Patna decision. There are cases which have taken a contrary view and there is no reason why we should not follow them when they correspond with our own view: see T. Sundarappa v. B. Sreeramulu (18) and Ala Singh v. Wasawa, 15 Ind. Cas. 25 (19).

The last question which has to be decided here is one of limitation. It has been contended that the suit was barred under Art. 12, Lim. Act. This Article would apply only if the sale is held to be binding on the plaintiffs. If the plaintiffs' interest is, on the other hand, found not to have been sold or the sale is held to be void against them, this Article cannot be permitted to stand in their way and they will be entitled to the relief claimed by them. The plaintiffs, as stated before, were no parties to the suit and were impleaded as Appanna's legal representatives after the preliminary decree had been passed. Were they represented then by Appanna during his lifetime? If they were so, they would not be able to get the relief unless the sale is first set aside. We have already observed that there is nothing to show on the record that the suit was brought against Appanna as a manager or karta of the family. Nor was the debt alleged by defendant No. 2 in his plaint to be binding on the joint family. The consideration for which the mortgage was executed by Appanna has not been found to be binding even on him—although in view of the decree passed against him, it is no longer open to the plaintiffs as his legal representatives to question the decree. But this does not mean that the decree has to be held binding on the plaintiffs as well in their individual character. Is the sale then to be held binding on them in their personal capacity? We are not of that opinion. When they were not represented by their father in the suit and the objections raised by them to the validity of the mortgage could not be and were not entertained by the Court, the decree and the sale could not be held to be binding on them, in the capacity in which the suit has been now brought. The sale being thus void, it was unnecessary for them to sue for setting it aside. Moreover, their cause of action arose on their dispossession of the property in 1929. Had they not been dispossessed, it would not have been really necessary for them to institute the present suit. The sale did not really affect their title and it could have been safely ignored by them.

It might be stated here that the sale of service tenure lands was a nullity and the plaintiffs were fully justified in not taking any notice of it. Learned Counsel for the respondent however relies on two cases, one of Patna and the other of this Court and contends that in similar circumstances, Art. 12, Lim. Act was held to be a bar. The first case on which reliance has been placed is reported in Bhola Jha v. Lalakali Prasad (20). The facts of that case were that some properties belonging to a joint Hindu family were mortgaged by the father who was the karta of that family. The mortgagees sued the father on the basis of their mortgage, obtained a decree, brought the properties to sale and purchased them themselves. The sons then instituted a suit for the recovery of possession of these properties and asked for a decree for redemption in the alternative. The trial Court held the plaintiffs—and this is important—to be bound to pay the debts contracted by their father but granted them a decree for redemption. When the case came up before the High Court, it was urged that since the plaintiffs were held bound by the mortgages and the decree, the sale of the properties had got to be set aside before they were allowed to redeem. The learned Judges accepted their contention and held that if a suit for redemption was held to be maintainable, the sale would have to be set aside before the plaintiffs were allowed to redeem. The decree for redemption was considered to be inconsistent with the sale already held and rightly so if we may say that with respect. The suit was therefore dismissed as being barred by Art. 12, Lim. Act. If the plaintiffs in the present suit were held bound by the mortgage effected by their father or if the decree was held to be binding on them in their individual character, they could not have been held entitled to maintain this action and their suit would have been also barred by limitation. But fortunately for them they have not been held to be so bound or represented by their father in the suit and the decision has therefore no application to the facts of this case.

The next case on which reliance was placed was decided by a Division Bench of this Court and is reported in Narayana Naicken v. Venkatasami Naicken (21). In that case it was held that the sale in a decree against a father would not be void as against the sons but only voidable at their option. The question whether the debt incurred by the father was of such a nature as to be binding on his sons was not gone into. It was more or less assumed that the sale of property in pursuance of a decree passed against a Hindu father would necessarily involve the sale of the son's rights as well. As the matter has already been discussed by us in this judgment it is unnecessary to examine this proposition again. The matter in our view would have to depend on the finding whether a debt was contracted by the father as the manager of the joint Hindu family so as to be binding on the sons which it would be their legal or pious obligation to repay. If on the other hand the debt is found not to have been due or to have been incurred for purposes which were immoral or illegal, a decree obtained in respect of such a transaction would not bind the sons and the sale held in execution could not be held to be binding on them so as to necessitate a prayer for setting it aside particularly when the property was purchased by either the decree-holder himself or even by a stranger having knowledge of the circumstances in which the debt was contracted. We are with great deference unable to agree with this decision and must hold that the suit was not barred by Art. 12, Lim. Act.

The appeal must be for the above reasons accepted and is hereby allowed. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the suit instituted by the plaintiffs decreed to the extent of the property comprised in the 'A' Schedule which they take along with defendant No. 1 and to the extent of 3/8th share in the property covered by the 'B' Schedule with mesne profits at the rate found by the lower Court. The plaintiffs will get their costs here and in the Court below from the contesting respondents. The court-fee payable on the plaint as well as on the memorandum of appeal should be paid to the Govt. by

HARRIES, C. J. AND VARMA, J.

THE ADVOCATE-GENERAL, ORISSA

versus

BHIKHARI CHARAN MAHANTI

AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 379, 23 and 24—Bona fide claim—Servant believing property to be his master's taking it away—Offence, if theft—Criminal trial—Criminal Courts—Complicated questions relating to property, power to decide.

The Criminal Court should not convict of theft any person who asserts a claim of right unless it is in a position to say that that claim is a mere pretence. [p. 829, col. 2.]

A person cannot be said to act dishonestly, that is with an intention of causing wrongful gain to himself or his master or wrongful loss to another, when he takes movable property which he believes to belong to himself or his master. In short, if the person taking any movable property does it under a bona fide claim of right, then he cannot be found guilty of the offence of theft unless the claim is a mere pretence. 5 Ind. Cas. 794 (5), 36 Ind. Cas. 136 (7), 39 Ind. Cas. 475 (8) and 119 Ind. Cas. 346 (9), relied on. [p. 828, col. 2.]

A servant may well be in a stronger position than his master, because a servant might, in certain circumstances, honestly believe that his master was the owner of certain property, whereas the master might well know that he was not. A servant should not be held guilty of the offence of theft when what he did was at his master's bidding, unless it should have been shown that he participated in his master's knowledge of the dishonest nature of the acts. Hari Bhushan v. Emperor (6), relied on. [p. 829, col. 2.]

A Criminal Court is not an appropriate tribunal to decide complicated questions relating to rights of property such as game birds between landlord and tenant.

Govt. A. from a decision of the District Magistrate of Balasore, dated June 5, 1939.

The Public Prosecutor, for Orissa, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk and G. C. Das, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Advocate-General of Orissa on behalf of the Prov. Govt. from an order of the learned District Magistrate of Balasore acquitting the respondents upon a charge of theft.

The respondent Purna Chandra Singh was charged under s. 379, I. P. C., while the respondent Bhikari Charan Mahanti was charged under s. 379, read with s. 114, I. P. C., for abetting the commission of the offence of theft by Purna Chandra Singh. Both the respondents pleaded not guilty; but a learned Magistrate of the second class found them guilty of the offence with which they were charged and convicted and sentenced each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 25 and in default of payment to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of one month. The respondents appealed to the Court of the learned District Magistrate, Balasore, where they were found not guilty and acquitted. At the conclusion of his judgment the learned District Magistrate made the following observation :

"But in view of the importance to the administration of the District that the doubts regarding the law relating to feræ naturæ should be made clear in the case of a conflict between a landlord and his tenant, this is, in my opinion, a fit case to go before the Hon'ble High Court for an authoritative ruling on the subject."

Presumably acting on this observation, the Prov. Govt. have preferred this appeal from the order of acquittal

The facts of the case can be shortly stated as follows :—

The respondent Bhikari Charan Mahanti is a Circle Officer in the Kanika Raj, whereas the respondent Purna Chandra Mahanti is a Forest Jamadar in the Raj. The complainant is a tenant within the Kanika estate and is a member of the Orissa Legislative Assembly. The subject-matter of the alleged theft is a dead bird worth about one rupee.

On December 3, 1938, a tenant of the Raj, one Mayadhar Naik (P. W. No. 2) together with Apurna Munjet (P. W. No. 3) went to a paddy plot No. 98 in village Garkola and there Apurna Munjet shot two gadargadira birds which were eating the paddy. They were accompanied by a servant Ohintamani Barik (P. W. No. 6) and the latter was ordered to take back the birds to Mayadhar Naik's house and to hand them over to the complainant Ohakradhar Behera (P. W. No. 1) who was staying with Mayadhar. Ohintamani Naik took the birds to Ohakradhar, and the latter ordered him to take one of the birds to Ohakradhar's home which was in a village called Haldia, some distance away. Ohintamani took the bird, and on his way he passed the Panchutikri Kachahri of the Kanika Raj. There he was stopped by the respondent Charan Mahanti and asked who had shot the bird. Ohintamani Barik said that Apurna Babu had shot the bird and that he was taking it to the house of Ohakradhar Babu. The respondents claimed that Apurna had no right to shoot the bird and that the dead bird belonged to the estate. It is said that Apurna refused to give up the bird, whereupon Purna Chandra Singh upon the orders of Bhikari Charan Mahanti snatched the bird from Ohintamani Barik and took it away. Ohintamani Barik returned to Mayadhar's house and there reported the matter to the complainant Ohakradhar Behera.

On their return from plot No. 8, Mayadhar and Apurna passed the Raj Kachahri and Apurna was stopped and questioned. Bhikari Charan Mahanti asked him if he had killed the bird and Apurna replied that he had killed two. He was taken to task and told that he had no right to shoot any birds without the permission of the Raj. His name, address and gun number were taken, and he was asked to submit a written apology. Apurna Manjet refused and said that he had all along been shooting in the Kanika Raj without permission granted by the Raj authorities.

It appears that on the day in question the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bhadrak was camping outside the village of Panchutikri, and Ohakradhar Behera immediately went to him and made a complaint. He filed a written complaint supported by a solemn affirmation which is printed at pp. 1 and 2 of the paper-book. He sets out the facts of the case and in the solemn affirmation he says that the respondent told Ohintamani Barik that the birds were killed without permission and that he would not be allowed to take away the birds. Thereupon Purna Chandra Singh snatched away the bird under the orders of the Circle Officer Bhikari Charan Mahanti. It is quite clear from this petition and solemn affirmation that the two respondents claimed that as the bird had been shot without permission granted by the estate authorities no one had a right to it and that it would have to be given up to the estate.

Shortly after Ohakradhar Behera had made this complaint, the respondent Purna Chandra Singh appeared before the Sub-Divisional Officer with the dead bird and reported that the bird was shot without authority. The Sub-Divisional Officer directed Purna Chandra Singh to file a complaint, and this was done in due course.

In that complaint, which is printed at pp 72 and 73 of the paper-book, it is alleged that the two gadargadira birds were shot on the abadi khasra land of the estate bearing plot No. 43. It is alleged that Apurna and Mayadhar entered the land-killed the birds without permission and after having killed them misappropriated the same. The complainant states that he protested and that Chintamani Barik took over one of the birds when told to do so. It is prayed that proceedings might be taken against Chakradhar Behera, Apurna Munjet, Chintamani Barik and Parikhit Naik for shooting and taking away the birds without the permission of the Raj.

The case against the respondents was heard by a Magistrate of the Second Class. He held that the birds were shot on plot No. 98 of village Garkola and not on the anabadi plot No. 43 of village Panchkutti as alleged by the defence. He further held that there was no custom in the Raj forbidding tenants to shoot birds or beasts on their holdings, and he accordingly held that the birds, when they were shot, belonged to the tenant. He further held that the bird had been forcibly snatched away from Chintamani Barik, and as the respondents had no right whatsoever to it he convicted them of theft and abetment of theft and fined each of them Rs. 25.

The learned District Magistrate on appeal was satisfied that the birds were shot on plot No. 98 of village Garkola and not on anabadi land of the Raj. The learned Magistrate did not consider whether any custom existed in the Raj relating to the right to take game or wild birds. He, however, was of opinion that all wild birds on the Raj belonged to the proprietor, and that being so the respondents who were the servants of the Raja Bahadur, could not be guilty of theft in taking the Raja's own property. He accordingly set aside the convictions and acquitted both the respondents.

On behalf of the Prov. Govt. it has been contended that the decision of the learned District Magistrate is clearly erroneous. It is contended that the right to take and kill all game and wild animals belongs to the tenant and not to the landlord unless such right to take and kill game etc., has been reserved expressly or by implication or unless by custom the proprietor and not the tenant is entitled to get the game and wild animals. It is admitted in this case that Mayadhari Naik (P. W. No. 2) was an occupancy tenant of the Raja Bahadur, and there is no suggestion in the case that at the creation of the tenancy the landlord reserved to himself the sole right of killing game, wild animals and birds. It is contended that the right to kill game, wild animals and birds is an incident to possession of property and that, apart from the circumstances which I have indicated, such right is given to the tenant upon the creation of a tenancy. Mayadhar Naik, though an occupancy tenant of plot No. 98 of village Garkola, was not in possession of this plot when these birds were shot. Mayadhar Naik in evidence stated that at that time the entire plot was cultivated by Sridhar Mahanti of Khidarpur and Bhramarbar Padhari of Daulatpur on the sanja system. In short the plot had been let to the cultivators on payment of a fixed quantity of paddy. It would appear, therefore, that Mayadhar Naik was not the tenant in actual possession of the plot. There is no suggestion, however, that on the day in question he was on the plot without the consent of his sub-tenants though there is no evidence of such consent. However, in my view it is not necessary in this case to consider the precise position of Mayadhar Naik with regard to this plot.

Mr. G. P. Das, the Public Prosecutor for Orissa, who has argued the case with great force on behalf of the Prov. Govt. has relied upon a number of authorities to establish the proposition that the right to take game belongs to the tenant and not to the landlord. He has pointed out that at common law in England the tenant is entitled to take and kill all wild animals on the land unless such right is reserved expressly or by implication by the landlord. He has contended that the English Common Law is correctly stated in Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, Twenty-third Edition, at p. 904. There it is stated:—

"At common law the right to take and kill game (in which, as in all animals feræ naturæ, there is no property) belongs to the tenant, and to the landlord, by virtue of the tenant's property in the land. It is and has long been very common, however, for the landlord to reserve the right to the game in the contract of tenancy, and the Game Act, 1831, which did away with the numerous restrictions and qualifications whereby a tenant was almost invariably prevented, even in a case where the game did not happen to be reserved to the landlord, from enjoying his right to it, has specially protected such reservation."

According to Mr. Das, such a rule is more appropriate to Indian conditions than English conditions because an occupancy tenant has a far greater interest in the land than a mere agricultural tenant in England who is in most cases a tenant from year to year, whose tenancy can be terminated by a year's notice to quit. In India the occupancy tenant cannot be ejected by a mere notice to quit. He has a right in the land which is heritable and now transferable as long as he continues to pay his rent and use the land for the purpose for which the tenancy was created, and after his death his descendants cannot be ejected therefrom. If the Law of England gives a tenant from year to year a right to take and kill game and wild animals, a fortiori the Indian tenant should have such a right.

It has been urged that the right of the tenant to take and kill game has been recognized by the Indian Courts, and reliance has been placed on a number of cases, namely, Mahanth Unni Moyi v. Malabar Kandepunni Nair (1), Raja Kishore Chandra Mardaraj v. Radha Gobind Das, 49 Ind. Cas. 198 (2), Emperor v. Artu Rautra (3), and Messrs. Henry Hill & Co. v. Sheoraj Rai (4). It is to be observed that only the last case cited deals with the respective rights of landlord and tenant, and the case of Messrs. Henry Hill & Co. v. Sheoraj Rai (4), deals not with game and wild animals and birds but with the right to take fish.

In my view it is not necessary in this case to express any opinion as to the rights of either landlord and tenant to game, because this case can be disposed of upon other grounds. In any event a Criminal Court is not an appropriate tribunal to decide difficult and complicated questions relating to rights of property. It appears to me upon the plain facts of this case that the respondents cannot be convicted of the offence of theft.

In the solemn affirmation made by the complainant Chakradhar Behera (P. W. No. 1), it is clearly stated that the respondents took the bird from Chintamani Barik, because they claimed that the bird belonged to the Raj as it had been shot without authority. It is also clear from the evidence of Apurna Munjet (P. W. No. 3) and Chintamani Barik (P. W. No. 6) that the respondents as officers of the Raj claimed the bird as belonging to the Raj because it had been shot without authority. If the two respondents took the bird believing that it belonged to the Raj as it had been shot without authority, then they could not be guilty of the offence of theft.

"Theft" is defined in s. 378, I. P. C., and the definition is in these terms:—

"Whoever, intending to take dishonestly any movable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent, moves that property in order to such taking, is said to commit theft."

It is to be observed that the essential ingredient of theft is an intention to take dishonestly. Without such intention the taking of movable property does not amount to theft. The word "dishonestly" is defined in s. 24, I. P. C., in these terms:—

"Whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing "dishonestly."

"Wrongful gain" and "wrongful loss" are defined in s. 23, I. P. C. "Wrongful gain" is gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled." "Wrongful loss" is the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled."

In my view, a person cannot be said to act dishonestly, that is with an intention of causing wrongful gain to himself or his master or wrongful loss to another, when he takes movable property which he believes to belong to himself or his master. In short, if the person taking any movable property does it under a bona fide claim of right, then he cannot be found guilty of the offence of theft.

The defence of bona fide claim of right has been recognized by all Courts in India, and Mr. Manuk who has argued the case with great ability and fairness on behalf of the respondents has cited a large number of cases.

In Dhirendra Mohan Gossain v. Emperor (5), a Bench of the Calcutta High Court (Jenkins, C. J. and Woodroffe, J.) held that if an accused asserts a claim to a thing alleged to have been stolen by him, he should not be convicted unless the Court is in a position to say that the claim is a mere pretence. At p. 403* Jenkins, C. J. observed:—

"In this case it is clear that the petitioners who have convicted assert a claim, and one who asserts a claim should not be convicted of theft, unless the Court is in a position to say that the claim is a mere pretence. This is the law as laid down in Hari Bhumali v. Emperor (6). Here it is impossible to say that the claim is a mere pretence. Indeed, the lower Appellate Court contemplates that there must be a civil suit about the tank which has given rise to the present criminal proceedings.

The result is that the rule must be made absolute, and the conviction and sentence set aside."

*Page of 14 O. W. N.—[Ed.]

A similar view was taken by Mookerjee and Sheepshanks, JJ. in Arfan Ali v. Emperor (7). It was held in that case that the removal of property in the assertion of a bona fide claim of right, though unfounded in law and fact, does not constitute theft. But a mere colourable pretence to obtain or keep possession of property does not avail as a defence. Whether the claim is bona fide or not must be determined upon all the circumstances of the case, and a Court ought not to convict unless it holds that the claim is a mere pretence. In this case the learned Judges cited and followed a statement of Sir Matthew Hale in his Pleas of the Crown (Vol. I pp. 508 and 509):

"It is the mind that makes the taking of another's goods to be a felony or a bare trespass only, but because the intention and mind are secret, the intention must be judged by the circumstances of the fact, and though these circumstances are various and may sometimes deceive, yet regularly and ordinarily these circumstances following direct in this case. If, A, thinking he hath a title to the horse of B, seizes it as his own, or supposing that B holds of him, distrains the horse of B without cause, this regularly makes it no felony, but a trespass, because there is a pretence of title, but yet this may be but a trick to colour a felony, and the ordinary discovery of a felonious intent is, if the party doth it secretly, or being charged with the goods denies it."

The learned Judges also cited with approval Sir Edward Hyde East's statement of the law in his Pleas of the Crown Vol. II, p. 659):

"In any case, if there be any fair pretence of property or right in the prisoner, or if it be brought into doubt at all, the Court will direct an acquittal; for it is not fit that such disputes should be settled in a manner to bring men's lives into jeopardy."

This view of the law was followed in this Court by Atkinson, J. in Sadasiv Singh v. Emperor 39 Ind. Cas. 475 (8). In that case the learned Judge laid down that "a man who honestly believes that he is taking away property from his own land cannot and ought not to be convicted of theft."

The learned Judge went further and held that "if a claim of title to property is honestly made and is not merely colourable, then the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court is ousted." It was perhaps unnecessary to deal with the question as to whether the jurisdiction of the Court is ousted when a bona fide claim of right is made. It appears to me sufficient to say that if such a claim is honestly made, then no conviction for theft can possibly be made.

In a later case of this Court, Ram Brich Lal v. Emperor (9), Dhavle, J., also gave effect to the defence of a bona fide claim of right.

In the present case the supposed owner, namely the Raja Bahadur of Kanika, did not himself claim the bird and the claim was made by his servants acting on his behalf. A servant may well be in a stronger position than his master, because a servant might, in certain circumstances, honestly, believe that his master was the owner of certain property, whereas the master might well know that he was not. The position of a servant was considered by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Hari Bhumali v. Emperor (6). In that case it was held that the Criminal Court should not convict of theft any person who asserts a claim of right unless it is in a position to say that that claim is a mere pretence. It was further held that a servant should not be held guilty of the offence of theft when what he did was at his master's bidding, unless it should have been shown that he participated in his master's knowledge of the dishonest nature of the acts. There must be some evidence before the Court from which such knowledge on the part of the servant can be inferred.

It appears to me that these cases clearly establish that if the present respondents honestly believed that the bird belonged to the Raj they cannot be convicted of theft. As I have stated earlier, the witnesses for the prosecution make it clear that the bird was taken from Ohintamani Barik because the respondents claimed that it belonged to the Raj as it had been shot without authority. That is even admitted in the solemn affirmation filed with the petition.

It is clear that the Kanika Raj has over a long period of time claimed the sole right to kill and take wild animals on Raj lands. The Raj has claimed the right to forbid the killing and taking of such animals without permission and has from time to time made known its views. As far back as the year 1907 a notice (Ex.-O) was published in a local paper called "The Star." This notice is printed at p. 32 of the paper-book and was actually issued on February 1, 1907. The notice is in these terms :—

"The public are hereby informed that shooting without permission, within the limits of Killah Kanika is strictly prohibited. The jungle in lands named 'Kalibhanja Dian' and 'Baguli Dian' are reserved and persons entering them, without permission, on any account, will be dealt with as trespassers.

Any gentleman wishing to visit the estate for sporting purposes should apply for permission to the Manager at Ganja, the-quarters of the estate."

It is not denied that such a notice was issued, but it is contended that the notice applies only to strangers. There can be no doubt, however that the person who issued the notice must have been under the impression that all game belonged to the Raj. The public were informed that shooting without permission within the limits of the Raj was strictly prohibited, that is shooting on either land in the Raja's possession or in the possession of tenants. The wording of the notice is wide enough to cover all types of land in the Raj. Shooting on all such land is forbidden, and even if the notice was intended to apply to strangers it is clear that the Raj claimed the right to the shooting on land in the occupation of tenants. If the tenants were entitled to grant permission, then obviously the Raj could not insist on its right to give permission. The form of the notice suggests clearly in my view that even as early as 1907 the Raja of Kanika claimed the sole right to take and kill game within the Raj.

In the trial Court a large number of documents were adduced in evidence on behalf of the respondents with a view to showing that the Raj insisted that no one was entitled to shoot within the confines of the Raj without express permission. The rules of the Forest Department of the Raj were put in evidence and also a number of applications for licenses and the licenses granted. It was urged in the Court below that these documents showed that by custom the Raja Bahadur had the sole right to take game. Mr. Manuk has not asked us to hold that the documents established any custom, but he has asked us to hold that these documents show that for a long period of time the Raja Bahadur of Kanika has rightly or wrongly claimed to have the sole right to take and kill all game and wild animals within the Raj.

In my judgment, the evidence adduced in this case undoubtedly shows that the owner of the Kanika Raj has always claimed the game. Such a claim may or may not be well founded, and I express no opinion whatsoever upon it. It is sufficient in this case for me to hold that such a claim has been and is now being put forward. There is nothing whatsoever to suggest that such a claim is not bona fide. That being so, it is impossible to hold that the respondents who were Raj servants were claiming this bird dishonestly. As servants of the Raj, they knew that the Raj claimed all game shot without permission, and it appears to me that they took this bird believing that the Raj was entitled to it. They said so when they took the bird, and I have no reason whatsoever to doubt that their action was due to the undoubted claim of the Raj.

It was contended that the defence put forward on behalf of the respondents clearly shows that they were not actuated by a bona fide claim of right when they took the bird. One of the defences was that the bird was not shot on Mayadhar's plot but on anabadi or uncultivated land of the Raj. Uncultivated land of the Raj would, of course, be in the Raj's possession, and prima facie he would be entitled to shoot all wild animals upon it. It has been urged that the very fact that this defence was put up shows that the respondents were not acting honestly. It is true that both the Courts found that this defence was not established; but in my view the important point of time is the actual moment the bird was taken from Ohintamani Barik. At that moment did the respondents believe that the bird really belonged to the Raj? If they did, then it must be held that their claim was a bona fide one. Nothing that occurred afterwards can really affect the matter. In my judgment the evidence for the prosecution establishes that these respondents did nothing more than seize property which they honestly believed belonged to their master. That being so, they could not be convicted of theft.

It appears that this point was never raised before the Courts below. Had such a point been taken, there would in all probability have been no appeal. In my judgment the respondents in this case acted under the honest belief that the bird belonged to the Raj and that concludes the matter.

Again I wish to make it clear that I express no opinion whatsoever upon the question as to whether the Raj's claim to game wild birds and animals on the land of occupancy or other tenants is or is not well founded in law. That is a matter which can only be determined in appropriate proceedings in another Court.

For the reasons which I have given, I would dismiss this appeal.

Varma, J.—I agree.

Mr. G. P. Das, the learned Public Prosecutor for Orissa, has tried to show that the acquittal was wrong by urging that neither the Raj nor its servants could have any rights to the birds shot by Apurna Munjet (P. W. No. 3) on plot No. 98 which was an occupancy holding of Mayadhar Naik (P. W. No. 2). The Criminal Court is not the proper forum to establish the relative rights of a landlord and a tenant to game birds, and it is not necessary on the materials before us to go into that complicated question. In this case we have to see whether a case of theft has been made out. "Theft" as defined in s. 378, I. P. C., is committed when property is removed dishonestly from the possession of another person. It is evident, therefore, that if the removal of the property is not dishonestly made, the charge of theft cannot sustain.

In this case, whether the taking of the birds, worth about one rupee, was dishonest or not can be gathered from what the complainant himself stated on solemn affirmation. He stated that the accused asked Chintamani Barik from where he had received the birds, and "Chintamani Barik told them that he received the bird from me and that he was taking it to my house. On hearing this they said that the bird was killed without their permission from the estate and they should not allow him to take that bird. Under orders of the Circle Officer, Purna Chandra Singh snatched away the bird from Chintamani Barik and took it to their Kutcherri house."

It is clear from this statement that the accused asserted a right to the bird as servants of the Raj. A petition of complaint was also subsequently filed by the Forest Jamadar of the Raj on December 10, 1938, against Chakradhar Behera (the complainant in this case), M. Apurna and Chintamani Naik, and it was alleged in this petition that these persons took the dead bird from land owned and held by the Raj and misappropriated the same and therefore they should be summoned and tried. It was further stated therein that the Sub-Divisional Officer had already been informed of the incident on the date of the occurrence and the delay in filing the petition was due to the fact that permission of the Raj had to be obtained beforehand. Taking the two complaints together, it is clear that the assertion of the right of the Raj to game birds is a fact supported by the statements of the complainant himself in this case. This assertion of right is a very old one, and in this case the accused asserted that right as servants of the Raj. In such circumstances they cannot be said to have removed the dead bird dishonestly unless it be held that the assertion was a mere pretence. On the evidence to which reference has been made in the judgment just now delivered, coupled with the statements of the complainant of this case and the Forest Jamadar of the Raj, I am of opinion that the case falls within the principle laid down in Hari Bhuniali v. Emperor (6). The acquittal of the accused in this case cannot, therefore, be recalled, and I would dismiss the appeal.

JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

versus

DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 132 (5), 182, ss. 19, 21—Plaint in suit in Court passing decree, for declaration that property is liable to be attached in execution, whether application to take step-in-aid—Application for transfer of decree, if step-in-aid—Held that written statement by mother on behalf of minor sons amounted to acknowledgment of decretal debt—Execution petition on personal decree held within time.

A plaint in a suit filed in the Court passing the decree, for declaration that certain property is liable to be attached in execution of the plaintiffs decree against his judgment-debtor, is not an application to take some step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act. Raghunandan Persad v. Bhugoo Lal (2), approved.

An application for transfer of a decree to a mufassil Court which has passed the same is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act. 132 Ind. Cas. 149 (4), relied on.

Held, on facts that the execution application upon the personal decree was within limitation as the written statement filed by the mother on behalf of her minor sons amounted to an acknowledgment of the decretal debt.

A. from the original order of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Tippera, dated March 30, 1937.

Messrs. A. C. Gupta, U. K. Roy, Nani Gopal Das and Ajit Kumar Dutta, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jatindra Mohon Ghose, for the Respondent.

R. C. Mitter, J.—This appeal is on behalf of the judgment-debtor and the principal point raised is one of limitation. The facts bearing upon the said point are as follows: One Kampta Persad, a person governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law mortgaged 12 annas share of some properties situated at Unao in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh to the respondent on August 12, 1920, for Rs. 60,000. He had at that time two sons of the names of Sheo Gobind and Tribhut Nath. Sheo Gobind had separated from him. Two more sons were born later, Biswambar and Biseswar, the latter being a posthumous one. In 1923, the mortgagee instituted his suit in the Court of Subordinate Judge at Unao to enforce the mortgage. Tribhut Nath was then dead, and Biseswar was not then born. The defendants were Kampta Persad and Biswambar, a minor, represented by his mother Gumti Debi as guardian ad litem. The preliminary decree was passed on April 12, 1924 and the final decree on January 17, 1925. The mortgaged properties were eventually sold for Rs. 59,354 leaving Rs. 31,234 odd as unsatisfied. For this amount together with subsequent interest a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Civil P. C., was passed on November 21, 1925 (for Rs. 31,727 odd). This is the decree which is now under execution. Before obtaining this personal decree the decree-holder applied for and obtained on September 12, 1925 an order for attachment before judgment of some properties including the Tipperah properties which are the subject-matter of this appeal. Before however the attachment could be effected Kampta Persad executed two deeds. The first was a deed executed on September 15, 1925 by which he dedicated to an idol some of the Tipperah properties. The second was a lease for 50 years which he executed on October 26, 1925 in favour of his brother-in-law Uday Bhan by which he reserved to himself, it is said, a small rent. Later on, Kampta Persad died on January 16, 1926, and shortly after his death his third son Biseswar was born.

In 1928 the decree-holder instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Unao, Suit No. 9 of 1928, for a declaration that the aforesaid two deeds, namely the deed of the endowment and the indenture of lease represented fictitious transactions, intended to defeat him and other creditors of Kampta Persad. The two surviving minor sons of Kampta Persad, namely Biswambar and Biseswar, represented by their mother Gumti Debi as guardian and the adult and separated son of Kampta Persad, named Sheo Gobind, were made defendants. In that suit Gumti Debi filed on February 22, 1928 a written statement (Ex C-2) on behalf of her minor sons. This is a very important document in the case. This suit terminated in a decree on September 21, 1928 passed against the minor sons of Kampta Persad. The said two deeds were declared invalid and the properties covered by them were declared to be liable to attachment of the respondent's decree passed under O. XXXIV, r. 6. Sheo Gobind was discharged, as he disclaimed all interest in the litigation. Later, on November 24, 1929 the personal decree passed under O. XXXIV, r. 6 was adjusted but nothing turns upon this adjustment. The mortgagee decree-holder reduced his claim subject to certain conditions. The first application was made by the decree-holder in the Unao Court on August 1, 1929. It was for transfer of the decree to the Court at Comilla. It is admitted by the appellant's Advocate that that application is to be taken as a step-in-aid of execution. An order was passed by the Unao Court for transfer of the decree to the Comilla Court, but nothing further was done by the decree-holder. He again applied for transfer of the decree on October 27, 1933 within three years of the order passed on his first application for transfer and obtained the necessary order on November 4, 1933. Nothing further was also done this time. He again applied for transfer in 1935 and after obtaining the order prayed for and the certificate of non-satisfaction from the Unao Court he applied in the Comilla Court for execution on May 9, 1935. As Biswambar had died in the meantime the application for execution was filed against Biseswar represented by his mother Gumti Debi as guardian who filed an objection under s. 47, Civil P. O. Many objections were raised to the execution but all were negatived by the Subordinate Judge by his order dated May 5, 1937. The appellant's Advocate has given up all the points, save two. Those two points are: (i) that the decree was incapable of execution as it was already barred when the first application by the decree-holder to take a step-in-aid of execution was made (August 1, 1929), that application being more than three years of the decree under execution; (ii) that the Subordinate Judge ought to have kept the question as to the validity of the deed of endowment open in these proceedings. The first point was overruled by the Subordinate Judge on two grounds, namely (a) that the plaint and decree passed in suit No. 9 of 1928 saved the decree-holder's application dated August 1, 1929 (b) that the written statement (Ex. C-2) filed by Gumti Debi on behalf of the minor judgment-debtor in Suit No. 9 of 1928 which was within three years of the decree under execution amounted to an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of s. 19, Lim. Act, and the first application of the decree-holder (dated August 1, 1929) being within three years of that date was in time.

Both these reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge are challenged as unsound by Mr. Gupta, the learned Advocate for the appellant. It is admitted by him that if the application of the decree-holder dated August 1, 1928 was in time, the present application for execution cannot be thrown out as not maintainable, for within three years of the order made on that application the decree-holder again took steps in aid of execution. Mr. Gupta does not challenge before us the correctness of the decision of Mukherjee and Mitter, JJ. in Sreenath Chakravarti v. Priya Nath Bandopadhyā (1), so far as it held that an application for transfer of a decree to a muffasil Court which had passed the same is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act. Mr. Gupta however submits that Art. 182 (5) speaks of an application to take some step-in-aid of execution made to the proper Court, that is the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree (Explan. II to Art. 182). He submits that the plaint filed in the Unao Court, cannot be regarded as an application within the meaning of that Article. The contention of Mr. Gupta is supported by the observation made by a Division Bench of this Court in Raghunandan Persad v. Bhugoo Lal (2), at p. 211. That was a case decided under the Lim. Act of 1877, but so far as this question is concerned there is no difference between Art. 179 (4) of the former Act and Art. 182 (5) of the Act of 1908 as finally amended. In other High Courts however a wider meaning has been assigned to the word "application" used in Art. 182 (5). The word has been construed to mean "request to a Court" and that Court need not be the Court of execution. It would, in that sense, include a plaint in a suit for declaration that certain properties are liable to be attached in execution of the plaintiff's decree against his judgment-debtor, the defendant, an act or deed of the latter which had the effect of impending execution being challenged and sought to be nullified in the suit. We do not propose to examine the cases in detail bearing upon this point, as we are basing our judgment on another ground. We may however, say that we prefer to follow the view expressed in Raghunandan Persad v. Bhugoo Lal (2) as it gives the natural meaning to the word "application" and the other Courts have not given proper consideration to the phrase "proper Court" used in Art. 182 (5) and defined in Explan. II to Art. 182.

Mr. Gupta's next argument is that Ex. C (2), the written statement filed by Gumti Debi on behalf of her minor son in Suit No. 9 of 1928, is not an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of s. 19, Lim. Act. He subdivides his argument into three parts. He says: (i) there was in it in fact no acknowledgment of an existing liability to the respondent, (ii) even if there was an admission in it by Gumti Debi that the amount due to the respondent under the decree passed in his favour under O. XXXIV, r. 6, such an admission cannot in law amount to an acknowledgment of liability by the judgment-debtor Biseswar as (a) Gumti Debi being only guardian ad litem cannot bind him by any statement which goes beyond the scope of the suit in which she was his guardian ad litem (b) even if Gumti Debi be regarded as the natural guardian of Biseswar, she cannot bind her ward by her acknowledgment of liability, unless it can be shown by the decree-holder that the said acknowledgment was made for the benefit of her ward. We cannot give effect to any of these contentions of Mr. Gupta. The respondent in his plaint of Suit No. 9 of 1928 made the statement that he had obtained against Kamta Persad a decree for Rs. 31,727-12-0 of November 21, 1925. He further stated that Kamta Persad had notice of the order for attachment before judgment of the properties at the time when he executed the deed of endowment and the indenture of lease and that he did execute them with the fraudulent object of depriving him and his other creditors, and that the remaining properties which Kamta Persad had were not sufficient to meet his claim under the said decree. He accordingly prayed for the declaration that those two deeds were null and void. Gumti Debi as guardian of her minor sons Biswambar and Biseswar filed the written statement on February 22, 1928. In paras. 17 and 19 she made the clear statement that the decree of the respondent was still unsatisfied. The plea she took can be summarized thus. True the respondent's decree was still unsatisfied but Kamta left considerable properties outside the deed of endowment and the lease which were more than sufficient to satisfy the respondent's decree and that (he the respondent) was not intentionally proceeding against those properties. There was in the written statement not only an acknowledgment of liability by Gumti Debi but that her statements regarding respondent's claim on his decree were relevant to the suit, being her defence to the charge of fraudulent alienation by Kamta Persad made in the plaint. If she could have substantiated the fact that Kamta Persad left properties outside the lease to his brother-in-law and the deed of endowment, which were sufficient to satisfy the respondent's claim on his decree, these two transfers would probably have been saved from the respondent's attack. Grounds Nos. (i) and (ii) (a) as urged by Mr. Gupta stated above are accordingly without substance and must be overruled.

In support of his ground (ii) (b) Mr. Gupta submits that an acknowledgment of liability by a guardian to be effective against the minor must be by his lawful guardian and for his benefit. Lawful guardian means a person who in law represents the minor. The phrase does not include a de facto guardian. But the person need not be appointed by the Court under the Guardians and Wards Act. If by the personal law of the minor a person is indicated as his guardian then that person is his lawful guardian. Here as the father was dead the mother, Gumti Debi, was the lawful guardian of her minor sons at the time she filed the written statement in Suit No. 9 of 1928. She cannot be taken to have momentarily ceased to be the legal guardian of her minor sons because she was appointed their guardian ad litem. The acknowledgment of liability made by her in paras. 17 and 19 of the said written statement must be taken to have been made by her as lawful guardian of her minor sons. The period of limitation for execution against them accordingly started from the date of the written statement, namely February 22, 1928, and the application of the decree-holder to the Unao Court dated August 1, 1929 was accordingly in time. This is the plain effect of s. 19 read with para. 1 of s. 21, Lim. Act of 1908.

In support of his contention that the acknowledgment of liability by a lawful guardian to have effect against a minor must be for his benefit, Mr. Gupta cites a number of cases. The relevant statements in the written statement Ex. C-2 being relevant to the suit were certainly made for the benefit of the minor. But apart from the said fact we cannot accept Mr. Gupta's contention on this point of law. The cases he cites are Annapa Gauda v. Sangadyapa (3), Ram Charan Dass v. Gaya Prosad (4), Wajibun v. Kadir Baksh (5) and Chidambaram Pillai v. Veerappa Chettiar, 43 Ind. Cas. 865 (6). The first three cases were decided under the Lim. Act of 1877. In that Act there was no provision corresponding to s. 21 (1) of the Act of 1908. An acknowledgment of liability to be effective had to be signed by the debtor or by his authorized agent. The question raised in those cases was whether a lawful guardian of a minor was his authorized agent. It was held in those cases that he was not but would be so regarded only if he acted for the benefit of the minor in making the acknowledgment of liability. The addition of the para. 1 to s. 21 in the Lim. Act of 1908 has in our judgment, made away with the said distinction. A lawful guardian is now under the statutory definition an authorised agent of the minor within the meaning of s. 19, Lim. Act. The new provision of s. 21, Lim. Act of 1908 was made to make the law clear and to place a lawful guardian in the same position as an authorized agent of an adult debtor. In the last case cited by Mr. Gupta Chidambaram Pillai v. Veerappa Chettiar (6) the change in the law by the Legislature was not considered and s. 21 (1) was not even noticed in the judgment.

With regard to the last contention raised by Mr. Gupta that the finding on the deed of endowment, arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge ought to be set aside, we are of opinion that his contention is sound. The idol has not preferred any claim in the execution proceedings and we are of opinion that in the absence of the idol, the question as to whether the deed of endowment creates a valid debutter or not, ought to be left open in these proceedings. With this modification the appeal is dismissed with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Application No. 83 of 1937

April 4, 1940

YORKER AND KADHA KRISHNA, JJ.

M. MOHD. IHTISHAM ALI—DEFENDANT

--APPLICANT

versus

L. LACHHMAN PRASAD AND ANOTHER

--PLAINTIFFS--OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 10—Trial which ought to have been stayed under U. P. Encumbered Estates Act not stayed—Order of revisable—U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), s. 9 (5)—Liability of debtors joint and several—S. 9 (5), if applies.

An order allowing continuation of the trial of a suit which had been stayed and which ought to have remained stayed under s. 10 of the Civil P. C., is a "decided case" within the meaning of s. 115 of the Code and is capable of being revised by the High Court. 111 Ind. Cas. 161 (1), followed. 158 Ind. Cas. 958 (2), 149 Ind. Cas. 176 (3) and 63 Ind. Cas. 15 (4), not followed. [p. 836, col. 1.]

Section 115 of the Civil P. C., gives the Chief Court a discretion to make such order in the case as it thinks fit where it is of opinion that the Subordinate Court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. Where an ordinary Civil Court finds that its jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of a suit is temporarily ousted by the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, and it elects none the less to proceed with the hearing of the suit, it acts with material irregularity; and it cannot be said that when the Court passes such an order, it is any less a case decided because the decision is not with reference to s. 10 but with reference to the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act. [p. 838, col. 2.] Section 9 (5), U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, applies to joint and several debt. 180 Ind. Cas. 114 (6), referred to.

The more general sense should be given to the term "joint debt" and whatever injury may thereby be done to the rights of creditors under the general law the intention of this Act is to limit the rights of creditors even in the case of debtors who are not entitled to the protection of the Act by giving to the Special Judge deciding claims under that Act an exclusive jurisdiction to apportion the liability under joint debts as between those debtors who have applied under the Act and those who have not. Whatever may be the position in regard to the "institution" of suits against non-applicant joint debtors in the ordinary Civil Courts, those suits cannot go forward unless and until the Special Judge has exercised his special jurisdiction to distribute the amount of the debts. Sub-section (5) (b) of s. 9 has been a part of the Act from the very beginning and the wording of that sub-section makes it clear that in the ordinary Civil Courts a creditor can only recover from a non-applicant joint debtor such amount as may be determined by the Special Judge to be due by him. Judgment.—This is an application in revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C., by Mohammad Ihtisham Ali defendant.

This application has arisen in the following circumstances:

The plaintiffs Lachhman Prasad and Madan Lal held a promissory note for Rs. 16,500 executed by two persons Mohammad Ihtisham Ali and Mohammad Azhar Ali on January 4, 1934. One of the debtors Azhar Ali made an application under the Encumbered Estates Act. Subsequently the creditors instituted a suit in the Court of the Civil Judge, Mohanlalganj Lucknow to recover Rs. 21,697-8 on foot of the pro-note. In their plaint the plaintiffs mentioned that Azhar Ali had already made an application under the Encumbered Estates Act. They sought relief in the first instance only against Ihtisham Ali, but they made a second prayer that in case the defendant No. 2 Azhar Ali should get his application under the Encumbered Estates Act dismissed, a decree should be given by the Court against both defendants. Subsequently the plaintiffs on May 4, 1937, discharged Azhar Ali from the suit entirely. The defendant Ihtisham Ali raised a number of pleas, but particularly he contended that in view of the provisions of Act XXV of 1934 (the Encumbered Estates Act) and s. 10 of the Civil P. C., the trial of the present suit should be stayed pending the decision of the Special Judge under s. 9 of the Encumbered Estates Act on the claim made by the plaintiffs in the Encumbered Estates Act proceedings, that is under s. 10 of the Act.

The learned Civil Judge framed an issue,

"Cannot the trial of the present suit be proceeded with in view of the provisions of the Act XXV. of 1934, and s. 10 of the Civil P. O.?"

He held that

"the matter in issue in the present suit was not also directly and substantially in issue."

In the proceedings before the Special Judge, and he therefore held that there was no bar to proceeding with the case before him. As regards the second question whether in view of the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act it was competent for him to proceed with the trial of the suit, he held that a person who has not made an application under the Encumbered Estates Act cannot urge that because another person who was a joint debtor with him has made an application under s. 4 a creditor is barred from maintaining a suit against the person who has made no application under s. 4 of the Encumbered Estates Act and cannot maintain a suit to enforce the debt against him individually in a proper Court.

It is from this order that the present application in revision has been filed. The first question which arises is whether an application in revision lies from such an order. Prima facie this would have seemed to be an interlocutory order but in view of the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Sahdeo Singh, Sardar v. Chanun Kuer, Sardarni, (5 O. W. N. 604)(1) that content on cannot be maintained. It was held that an order allowing continuation of the trial of a suit which had been stayed and which ought to have remained stayed under s. 10 of the Civil P. O., is a "decided case" within the meaning of s. 115 of the same Code and is capable of being revised by the High Court. It is true that there are remarks in the judgment of Srivastava, J. in Paras Nath v. Ran Bahadur (1935 O. W. N. 1158) (2) which would lead to a contrary conclusion but those remarks would not suffice by themselves to justify us in taking a different view, and we are clear that we must act upon the view that an application in revision is competent. We should, however, note that a different view is taken by the High Courts at Allahabad and Lahore, vide the cases of Madan Mohan v. Kuar Kamla Narain Dube (A. I. R.

(2) 1935 O. W. N. 1158; 158 Ind. Cas. 949; 1935 O. L. R. 633; 2 R. O. 138; A I R 1936 Oudh 22 (F B).

1935 All. 520) (3) (based on the Full Bench ruling of the same Court in Buddhu Lal v. Mewa Ram, I. L. R. 43 All. 564) (4) and Durga Das v. Gobind Singh (A. I. R. 1936 Lahore 569) (5).

It is contended on behalf of the applicant that the learned Civil Judge has not given proper consideration to the provisions of s. 9 (5) of the Encumbered Estates Act. Section 9 (5) deals with the determination of the liability of joint debtors who are not members of a joint Hindu family. Sub-s. (5) (b) provides that "if all the joint debtors have not applied under s. 4 the creditors shall have a right to recover from the debtors who have not applied only such amount on account of the joint debts as may be determined by the Special Judge to be due by them."

By s. 9 (5) (a) it is provided that

"for the purpose of determining the amount of the joint debt which is due by the debtor or debtors who have applied and the amount due by those who have not applied, the Special Judge shall make the joint debtors who have not applied parties to the proceedings and shall hear any objection that they may make before recording his finding."

The section thus contemplates the apportionment of liability for a joint debt between those debtors who have applied under the Encumbered Estates Act and those who have not applied, and it would seem that the intention of the Act is that in all cases of joint debts to which applicants under the Act are parties the jurisdiction to decide the amount recoverable from the applicants and that recoverable from the non-applicants rests with the Special Judge. If this is a correct interpretation of the intention of the legislature and if these provisions of the Act are applicable to the debt in suit, it follows that it was the duty of the Civil Judge to leave to the Special Judge the decision of the amount recoverable from the defendant Mohammad Ihtisham Ali.

On behalf of the opposite party creditors it is pointed out that this pro-note was executed by Mohammad Azhar Ali and Mohammad Ihtisham Ali jointly and severally. When the case came up in Court on March 16, 1937, a statement was made on behalf of Mohammad Ihtisham Ali that as between the plaintiffs and the defendants the position of Mohammad Ihtisham Ali was that of a joint debtor, but as between the defendants inter se the position of Ihtisham Ali was that of a surety for Azhar Ali. It was upon this statement that the plaintiff stated on behalf of the plaintiffs that they discharged Azhar Ali from the suit and gave an undertaking that they were not going to prove this debt in the Court of the Special Judge that is against Azhar Ali. This undertaking was evidently conditional on their being able to obtain a decree for the amount of the debt against Ihtisham Ali, leaving Ihtisham Ali to recover from his co-debtor Azhar Ali. The main argument for the opposite party is that s. 9 (5) applies only to joint debts and not to debts for which the debtors are liable jointly and severally, and it follows that there is nothing in that section to preclude the Civil Judge from trying out the case against Ihtisham Ali and granting a decree to the plaintiffs for the full amount claimed, leaving Ihtisham Ali to seek his own remedy against Azhar Ali. In this connection reliance is placed on Swadeshi Bima Co. Ltd., Agra v. Shiv Narain Katiyar, (A. I R. 1939 All. 75) (6) in which it was held that

"where the liability of two debtors is not merely joint, but also joint and several, and one of them happens to be a landlord who makes an application under s. 4 of the Encumbered Estates Act, it is not open to the other in a suit brought by the creditor against both of them to raise the objection that the suit so far as it relates to him cannot be instituted."

In this decision the learned Judge remarked that there could not be the slightest doubt that the plaintiff could have recovered the debt either from Shiv Narain Katiyar or from Kanhi Singh (Shiv Narain was the applicant under the Encumbered Estates Act). He went on to say at a later stage.

"There is nothing, however, in any provision contained in the Encumbered Estates Act even to suggest that the plaintiff's right to bring a suit against Kanhi Singh is barred or limited in any way."

He noted that Encumbered Estates Act provided only for a decree being passed in favour of a claimant against the landlord who makes an application under the Act, and he further remarked that "If the plaintiff was not allowed to institute the suit (that is against the joint debtor Kanhi Singh) the necessary result would be that his claim against Kanhi Singh would be barred by time."

On this view he held that the institution of the suit by the plaintiff against the joint debtor who was not an applicant under the Act was fully competent and (6) A. I R. 1939 All. 75; 120 Ind. Cas. 114; 1938 R. D. 876; (1938) A. L. J. 1153; 11 R. A. 430; 1 L. R. 1939 All. 115.

the suit should not have been dismissed. In the event, however, he remarked that it would be open to the learned Small Cause Court Judge to wait for the decision of the Special Judge regarding the liability of Kanhi Singh.

With the greatest respect it appears to us that logically on the view taken by the learned Judge that it was competent for the plaintiff to institute the suit against the joint debtor, it was equally competent for him to obtain a decree against the joint debtor for the whole amount unless further proceedings in the suit were to be stayed either under s. 10 of the Civil P. C., or in view of the provisions of s. 9 (5) (b) conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the Special Judge. Either he must wait for the decision of the Special Judge or he need not do so. The learned Judge has left it open as to which view he takes on that point, and that is the point which is the critical point in the present case.

The second point urged on this application on behalf of the creditors is that in virtue of his own statement that he is really a surety the defendant Ihtisham Ali is barred from asking for a stay of the proceedings before the Civil Judge in view of the proceeding in the Court of the Special Judge. Section 9 (5) has been amended by Act XI of 1939 and two sub-s. 9 (5) (c) and 9 (5) (d) have been added. Sub-section 9 (5) (c) relates to cases where no suit had been instituted in respect of a joint debt and we need not consider it. Sub-section 9 (5) (d) relates to cases where a suit in respect of the joint debt had been instituted and proceedings therein were stayed under sub-s. (1) of s. 7. It provides that the Court in which such suit has been instituted shall on the application of the creditor proceed with such suit in accordance with sub-s. (c) as against those joint debtors who had not applied under s. 4 in respect of the amount of the joint debt determined by the Special Judge to be due from such joint debtors provided that for the purposes of this Act a person who is liable for a debt as a surety shall not be deemed to be a joint debtor. By this provision a surety is evidently excluded from the whole scheme of apportionment which finds a place in sub-s. (5) of s. 9 of the Act. The argument might have had some force if this sub-section had formed a part of the Act at the time when the matter was before the lower Court, but in any case it is not part of the case that so far as relates to the creditors the defendant claims any consideration on the ground that in reality he was a surety. On the contrary he admits that as regards the creditors he is a joint debtor, and it is on that footing that the question at issue must be decided.

The most important point which is really being urged against this application is that s. 9 (5) has no application to joint and several debts but applies only in the case of debts which are strictly joint debts. We note that just as in the present case the learned Judge who decided the case of Swadeshi Bima Co., Ltd., Agra v. Shiv Narain Katiyar, (A. I. R. 1939 All. 75) (6) was dealing with a debt for which the defendants were liable jointly and severally. We ourselves are clearly of opinion that the words used in this section, where mention is made of joint debtors and joint debts or joint decrees, are not used in the very strict sense of debts and decrees for which the debtors cannot be made liable or proceeded against individually. There is nothing in the wording of these sections which requires that they be interpreted in that very strict sense. We are therefore of opinion that the more general sense should be given to them, and we understand, as evidently did the learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court, that whatever injury may thereby be done to the rights of creditors under the general law the intention of this Act is to limit the rights of creditors even in the case of debtors who are not entitled to the protection of the Act by giving to the Special Judge deciding claims under that Act an exclusive jurisdiction to apportion the liability under joint debts as between those debtors who have applied under the Act and those who have not. On this view it is clear that whatever may be the position in regard to the "institution" of suits against non-applicant joint debtors in the ordinary Civil Courts those suits cannot go forward unless and until the Special Judge has exercised his special jurisdiction to distribute the amount of the debts. Sub-section (5) (b) of s. 9 has been a part of the Act from the very beginning and the wording of that sub-section makes it clear that in the ordinary Civil Courts a creditor can only recover from a non-applicant joint debtor such amount as may be determined by the Special Judge to be due by him.

Only one other point has been put forward on behalf of the opposite party.

Learned Counsel argues that the Full Bench ruling of this Court on which reliance has been placed for the competency of the present revision has no application because the application itself is really founded not on s. 10 of the Civil P. O., but on s. 9 (5) (a) and (b) of the Encumbered Estates Act. We do not think that that really affects the issue. Section 115 of the Civil P. O., gives this Court a discretion to make such order in the case as it thinks fit where it is of opinion that the subordinate Court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. We are of opinion, that where an ordinary Civil Court finds that its jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of a suit is temporarily ousted by the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, and it elects none the less to proceed with the hearing of the suit, it acts with material irregularity, and it cannot be said that when the Court passes such an order, as has been passed in the present case, it is any less a case decided because the decision is not with reference to s. 10 but with reference to the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act.

In our opinion, therefore, the learned Civil Judge was not justified in holding that the trial of the present suit could be proceeded with in spite of the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act. We accordingly set aside his order and direct that pending the decision of the Special Judge under s. 9 (5) (b) of the Encumbered Estates Act the plaintiffs suit to recover the amount of his debt from Mohammad Ihtisham Ali shall remain stayed. The applicant will get his costs of this application.

Order set aside.

Practice—Revision—Matter under investigation—Remedy available by way of appeal—Interference by High Court held undesirable.

It is the practice of the Patna Court to refrain from dealing with a matter in revision where a definite remedy is provided to the parties in the form of an appeal. Where the matter is still under investigation and the Subordinate Judge has not finally decided any question and the objections, which the petitioner is trying to urge can still be urged before the Subordinate Judge, in such circumstances, even if the High Court has the power to interfere with the order of the Subordinate Judge, it would be undesirable to do so. Braja Kumar Neogy v. Babu Harihar Prasad Narayan Deo, Civil Rev. No. 327 of 1933, relied on.

O. R. App. against an order of the Special Subordinate Judge, Ranchi, dated June 5, 1939.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and L. K. Chowdhury, for the Petitioner, Messrs. B. C. De and K. K. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

Fazl Ali, J.—This application is directed against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge at Ranchi on June 5, 1939, in suit No. 36 of 1936.

It appears that a preliminary decree has already been passed in the suit and a Commissioner has been appointed to take accounts. The defendants produced some account books before the Commissioner, which were rejected by him. When the matter came up before the Subordinate Judge, he referred to the objections raised by the plaintiff in regard to the account books and held that they could not be rejected on those grounds alone. He directed the Commissioner to investigate the points of dispute between the parties by taking evidence about the actual facts and to state his opinion in the matter. The Commissioner is still proceeding with the inquiry and no final decree has been passed yet. The petitioner, however, objects to the observations made by the learned Subordinate Judge with regard to the account books and contends that the Subordinate Judge has not dealt with all the objections raised by him in regard to the account-books. These objections have been enumerated in para. 12 of the petition.

It has been urged on behalf of the opposite party that this is not a fit case for revision because the petitioner has raised grounds in this petition, which he can very well raise in an appeal from the final decree after such a decree is passed. In my opinion, the argument put forward on behalf of the opposite party is a correct one. It was pointed out by me in Braja Kumar Neogy v. Babu Harihar Prasad Narayan Deo (Civil Revision No. 327 of 1933, disposed of on April 19, 1934) that it is the practice of this Court to refrain from dealing with a matter in revision where a definite remedy is provided to the parties in the form of an appeal. I do not see any reason for departing from this practice in this case. The matter is still under investigation and the Subordinate Judge has not finally decided any question. The objections, which the petitioner is trying to urge in this Court can still be urged before the Subordinate Judge. In such circumstances, even if we had the power to interfere with the order of the Subordinate Judge, which is before us, it would be undesirable to do so.

I would, therefore, dismiss this application with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Meredith, J.—I am emphatically of the same opinion as my learned brother.

Second Appeals Nos. 23 and 40 of 1938

BRIDE, J.

RAM RATTAN AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS
versus

FAZAL HAQ AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 60 (2), 28—S. 60 (2), scope of and applicability—Insolvent, member of agricultural tribe at time of sale by Receiver—S. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, if applies—Temporary alienation of insolvent's property, whether can be made—Property vested in Receiver under s. 28—If legal owner—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 20—Proper party—Party interested in result of appeal, if can be added after limitation—Insolvency—Second Appeal—Competency of, when no question under s. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act is decided.

Sub-s. (2) of s. 60, Prov. Insol. Act is intended to supplement s. 23, and to save the operation of enactments prohibiting execution of decrees or orders against the immovable property of the insolvent even after the property has vested in the Receiver and must be held to apply to a sale by the Receiver. Section 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act applies to a sale by the Receiver of the land belonging to an insolvent who is a member of a notified agricultural tribe as the sale is held in enforcement of an order of adjudication. While applying s. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the status of the insolvent at the time of the sale of the property must be taken into consideration, in the same way as it is in execution of decrees. The insolvent's acquiring the status of a member of an agricultural tribe after the adjudication, does not prevent the operation of sub-s. (2) of s. 60 at the time of sale of the property. Section 16, Punjab Alienation Act, does not prohibit the temporary alienation of such land, and it is therefore open to the Receiver to arrange for the temporary alienation of the land of the insolvents according to law.

[Case-law discussed.]

Where the real contesting respondent is duly impleaded, another person who is supporting the case of the appellant and is interested in the result of the appeal, can be impleaded as a proper party under O. XLI, r. 20, Civil P. O., even after the period of limitation has expired. 172 Ind. Cas. 776 (12), relied on.

Legally the Receiver and not the insolvent is the owner of the property, which vests in the Receiver under s. 28, Prov. Insol. Act on the order of adjudication being passed.

Quære:—It is doubtful whether second appeals are competent in cases where no question falling under s. 4, Prov. Insol. Act, has been decided.

S. A. from the order of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated May 7, 1938.

Mr. S. L. Puri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dwarka Nath Aggarwal, for the Respondent (Fazal Haq).

Judgment.—S. A. O. Nos. 23 and 40 of 1938, are two appeals which arise out of different insolvency proceedings, but the main point for decision in both being the same question of law, these can be disposed of together. I doubt if second appeals are really competent in these cases as no question falling under s. 4, Prov. Insol. Act, seems to have been decided; but the point has not been raised and in any case petitions for revision would be competent in view of the question of law involved. The material facts bearing on the question of law in the two cases may be briefly stated as follows: (i) In S. A. O. No. 23 of 1938 one Sheikh Fazal Haq, a Kakkezai Sheikh, was adjudicated an insolvent on March 19, 1931 and his property vested in the Receiver. Before the sale of his property however the Kakkezai tribe was declared an agricultural tribe under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act by a notification of the Punjab Govt., dated August 30, 1935. An objection was then raised that his land could not be sold in view of the provisions of s. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, and this objection has been upheld by the Courts below. From this decision the creditors have preferred an appeal. (ii) In S. A. O. No. 40 of 1938, on a petition filed by a creditor on April 27, 1935, Lal Chand, respondent, a Pleader of Lyallpur, was adjudicated insolvent on October 17, 1936. Lal Chand claimed to have become a Christian on October 12, 1936, i.e., five days before the adjudication and contended that as Christians were notified as an agricultural tribe under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act in the Lyallpur District, his land could not be sold in the insolvency proceedings. The allegation that Lal Chand had become a Christian was disputed and this question of fact should have been decided first. But the Courts below have proceeded to decide the question of law first, assuming that Lal Chand had become a Christian on October 12, 1936 as alleged by him. The contention of Lal Chand that his land could not be sold has been upheld by the Courts below and from this decision one of the creditors has preferred this appeal.

The facts in this second case are practically on a par with those in S. A. O. No. 23 of 1938, so far as the point of law is concerned, except this that the insolvent in the second case became a member of an agricultural tribe after the presentation of the petition for insolvency, but before the date of adjudication. In the second case, the insolvent became a member of an agricultural tribe by a voluntary conversion to Christianity and not by any notification as in the first case; but this will not make any difference, if it is found that as a matter of fact he did become a Christian on October 12, 1936 as alleged. Shortly stated the point of law, arising in the two cases thus is whether the land belonging to an insolvent, which has vested in a Receiver after his adjudication can be sold by the Receiver if the insolvent acquires the status of a member of an agricultural tribe notified under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, at any time before the date of the sale; or is s. 16 of that Act a bar to such a sale? The learned Counsel for the appellants relied mainly on two points. It was urged firstly that: (a) when a person is adjudged insolvent, his property vests in the Receiver under s. 28, Prov. Insol. Act, and the Receiver becomes legally the owner of the property as a result. The fact that the insolvent has become a member of an agricultural tribe thereafter is immaterial as the property in question belongs to the Receiver and not the insolvent at the date of the sale; and secondly that (b) the sale of property in the insolvency proceedings is effected by the Receiver and is therefore not a sale in execution of a decree or order of the Court within the meaning of s. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act.

As regards the first point, reliance was placed on Official Assignee of Bombay v. Registrar, S. C. C., Amritsar (1), and the commentary in Mulla's Law of Insolvency at pp. 167-169. There can be, I think, no doubt that the property of an insolvent vests completely in the Receiver after the adjudication order is passed; for otherwise the Receiver could not dispose of the property and convey valid title to the alienees. It is true that the insolvent gets any surplus after the distribution of the sale proceeds of the assets amongst the creditors but that appears to be due to the statutory provision contained in s. 67, Prov. Insol. Act. After considering the relevant provisions of the Act, as regards the vesting of the property in the Receiver, it seems to me that the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants that legally the Receiver and not the insolvent is the owner of the property, which vests in the Receiver on the order of adjudication being passed is correct. But the property of the insolvent is vested in the Receiver for the purposes of the Prov. Insol. Act and its administration by the Receiver is subject to the provisions of that Act. Part III of the Act deals with the administration of the insolvents' property after adjudication and sub-s. (2) of s. 60, which is strongly relied upon by the respondents, runs as follows:

"Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect any provisions of any enactment for the time being in force prohibiting or restricting the execution of decrees or orders against immovable property; and any such provisions shall be deemed to apply to the enforcement of an order of adjudication made under this Act as if it were such a decree or order."

This sub-section is evidently intended to protect the interests of the insolvent by saving the application of enactments prohibiting or restricting the execution of decrees or orders against the immovable property of the insolvent in the hands of the Receiver. If it were held that enactments prohibiting or restricting the execution of decrees or orders against the immovable property of the insolvent will not apply to sale of property which has vested in the Receiver because the insolvent is no longer the owner of the property, s. 60 (2) will be practically rendered nugatory. In view of the scheme of the Act and its place in Part III of the Act which deals with the administration of property, there seems little room for doubt that s. 60 must be held to apply to sale of the insolvent's property which has vested in the Receiver. It is noteworthy in this connexion that sub-s. (5) of s. 28 lays down that the property of an insolvent which is exempted from attachment and sale in execution of a decree by the Civil P. Ct., or any other enactment will not vest in the Receiver at all. Sub-s. (2) of s. 60 seems to be intended to supplement s. 28 and to achieve the same object by saving the operation of similar enactments even after the property has vested in the Receiver. Section 60 lays down that an enforcement of an order of adjudication is to be deemed to be tantamount to an enforcement of a decree or order of a Court. Now a sale by a Receiver is certainly made in enforcement of an order of adjudication. Consequently, the provisions of s. 16, Punjab Alienation Act, which apply to execution of decrees and orders of Courts against land belonging to members of a notified agricultural tribe must, I think, be held to apply to a sale by the Receiver of land belonging to an insolvent who is a member of such a tribe. The above view receives support from Mirza v. Jhanda Ram (2) in which it was held that although the land belonging to an insolvent who is member of an agricultural tribe vests in the Receiver it could not be sold in view of the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 60, Prov. Insol. Act.

In the present instance, one of the insolvents (Sh. Fazal Haq) became a member of an agricultural tribe after adjudication. The other (Lal Chand) became so a few days before adjudication; but that would not make any difference as the order of adjudication relates back to the date of the petition by virtue of the provisions of sub-s. (7) of s. 28 of the Act. It must therefore be held that both the insolvents acquired the status of a member of an agricultural tribe after the adjudication, i. e., after their property had vested in the Receiver. But this fact would not, I think, prevent the operation of sub-s. (2) of s. 60 at the time of sale of the property. Section 60 appears to be intended (as stated above) to save the application of enactments like the Punjab Alienation Act in the course of the enforcement of the order of adjudication as if it were tantamount to execution of a decree or order of a Court and will therefore apply to sales by the Receiver. The status of the insolvent at the time of the sale of the property must therefore I think be taken into consideration, in the same way as it is in execution of decrees. There is ample authority for the proposition that the status of the judgment-debtor at the time of the sale of his property in execution of decrees has to be taken into consideration in considering the application of s. 16, Punjab Alienation Act, or similar enactments to the sale and the same principle will, I think, apply to a sale in enforcement of adjudication order, (cf. Mahabir Prasad v. Mahesh Prasad (3), Ram Prasad v. Gorelal (4) and Ghulam Qadir Khan v. Gurbakhsh Singh (5). The facts in Mahabir Prasad v. Mahesh Prasad (3) were practically on all fours with those in the present case except that the sale in that case was to be made in execution of a decree. The judgment-debtors in that case were notified as members of an agricultural tribe after the passing of the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit. It was held that land could not be sold in execution of the final decree in view of the provisions of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act, which correspond to those of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. In Ram Prasad v. Gorelal (4) it was held that so long as the land is not sold, the judgment-debtors are entitled to claim the privilege to which they are entitled under the same Bundelkhand Act. To the same effect is the view taken in Thakur Das v. Roshan Bibi (6) and Chhajju Ram v. Muzaffar Ahmad (7). In Ghulam Qadir Khan v. Gurbakhsh Singh (5) land belonging to a person who was notified as a member of an agricultural tribe was sold in execution of a decree. The Punjab Alienation of Land Act however came into force before its confirmation and it was held that the sale could not be confirmed. If a sale made in enforcement of an order of adjudication stands on the same footing as a sale in execution of a decree, I do not see why the principle followed in the above rulings should not apply to the sales in the present case. In insolvency proceedings, the creditors get the benefit of any property acquired by or devolving upon the insolvent after adjudication. In the same way there seems to be no reason why the insolvent should not get the benefit of any exemption to which he becomes entitled after adjudication.

The answer to the second argument of the learned Counsel for the appellants, viz., that s. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, does not apply because the sale by the Receiver is not a sale in execution of a decree or order of a Court has also no force in view of s. 60 (2) referred to above, which places a sale in enforcement of an order of adjudication on the same footing as a sale in execution of a decree or order of a Court. Gur- bakhsh Singh v. Sardar Singh (8) was a case under the Pre-emption Act and the question of the effect of s. 60 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, did not arise and was not considered in that case. The learned Counsel for the appellants has further relied upon Jnanendra Kumar Roy v. Akash Chandra (9) and Mahomed Sharif v. Mrs. Boughton (10) and urged that once a property has vested in the Receiver he cannot be divested of it by any status acquired by the insolvent subsequently. But in these rulings also, the effect of s. 60 (2) does not appear to have been taken into consideration. In the present instance, moreover there is really no question of divesting the Receiver of any property. Section 16, Punjab Alienation Act, only prohibits the sale of the land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe. It has been however held in Datar Kaur v. Ram Rattan (11) that the section does not prohibit the temporary alienation of such land, and this view has been consistently followed in this Court. It will be therefore open to the Receiver to arrange for the temporary alienation of the land of the insolvents according to law.

In view of the above findings, it is unnecessary to discuss a preliminary objection which was raised in S. A. O. No. 40 of 1938, viz., that the appeal was incompetent as the Receiver was not impleaded as a party within the period of limitation. But I may mention that the Receiver in this case was throughout supporting the case of the appellant in the Courts below and being interested in the result of the appeal, he could be impleaded as a proper party under O. XLI, r. 20, Civil P. C., even after the period of limitation had expired; cf. Swaminatha O'ayyar v. Gopalaswami Odayar (12). The real contesting respondent in this case was the insolvent himself and he had been duly impleaded. In view of all the circumstances, I have allowed the Receiver to be impleaded under O. XLI, r. 20, Civil P. C. I dismiss both these appeals, but in view

Pre-emption—Oudh—Superior proprietor creating under-proprietary right and selling it to person who is already proprietor and under-proprietor—Co-sharer in the mahal, if can pre-empt.

A superior proprietor created an under-proprietary right which he sold to a person who was already a proprietor and also an under-proprietor. A pre-emption suit was brought by the plaintiff on the ground that he was a co-sharer in the mahal concerned and the defence of the vendees was that under the Oudh Laws Act being under-proprietors they came before a superior-proprietor and he could not, therefore, pre-empt a sale of under-proprietary rights made in their favour:

Held, that the transaction could not be called a sale of a superior proprietary right. The vendor's share in the proprietary khewat would in no way be modified by the fact that he had created an under-proprietary right. The only change in the khewat would be in the under-proprietary khewat. Cases like this could not be distinguished from sales of a prior existing under-proprietary right and consequently the vendees had a preferential right to the would-be pre-emptor and his suit must fail.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against a decision of a Single Judge of this Court under s. 12 (2), of the Oudh Courts Act.

The admitted facts are that a superior proprietor created an under-proprietary right which he sold to a person who was already a proprietor and also an under-proprietor.

A pre-emption suit was brought by Syed Mahfuz Ali on the ground that he was a co-sharer in the mahal concerned and the defence of the vendees was that under the Oudh Laws Act being under-proprietors they came before a superior-proprietor and he could not therefore pre-empt a sale of under-proprietary rights made in their favour. All the Courts decreed the suit including the learned Single Judge of this Court. He held that this was not a sale of an already existing under proprietary right but a transaction by which an under proprietary right was created and since the property in suit was held before the transaction in proprietary tenure, the transaction must be held to have involved also a sale of a share of a proprietary tenure, although the effect of the transaction was to create an under-proprietary tenure. We are unable to agree with the learned Judge that the transaction could be called a sale of a superior proprietary right. The vendor's share in the proprietary khewat would in no way be modified by the fact that he had created an under-proprietary right. The only change in the khewat would be in the under-proprietary khewat. It seems to us then that there can be only two possible views: the first that there was no sale of an under proprietary right because it was not already in existence in which case no one could pre-empt or else that a transaction involving the creation and also the sale of an under-proprietary right would be the sale of an under proprietary right and if so a proprietor cannot pre-empt against a vendee who being already an under-proprietor has a prior right to pre-empt an under proprietary right. Speaking generally, we might say that the object of pre-emption is to prevent the introduction of a stranger in a particular community, be it an under-proprietary or a proprietary community. If this transaction could not be pre-empted, then a new under-proprietor who was formerly a stranger would be introduced and he could pre-empt subsequent sales of under-proprietary rights as much as any other pre-existing under-proprietor and the object of keeping strangers out of the under-proprietary body would not be achieved. We think that cases like the present one cannot be distinguished from sales of a prior existing under-proprietary right and consequently the vendees had a preferential right to the would-be pre-emptor and his suit must fail.

We, therefore, allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 4—“Undivided family,” meaning—S. 4 read with s. 44, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), meaning explained—“Dwelling house belonging to an undivided family,” meaning of.

The expression “undivided family” in s. 4 (1), Partition Act means an undivided family whether Hindu, Muhammadan, Christian or Buddhist, etc. Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad (1), relied on.

The transferee of a share in undivided property is entitled under s. 44, T. P. Act, to his transferor's right to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property in all cases except where the subject-matter of the transfer is a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family of which he (the transferor) is not a member in which case he is not entitled to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property but is entitled to a partition of the property which however must be denied to him under s. 4, Partition Act in the event of a member of the family being a share-holder, undertakes to buy the share of the transferee.

The expression “dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family” in s. 4, Partition Act, has been borrowed from s. 44, T. P. Act, and bears the same meaning. Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad (1), relied on.

The expression “dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family” refers to the family dwelling-house. It does not mean any house or building for human dwelling belonging to an undivided family. Where the house is for most of the time in the occupation of tenants it is not a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family within the meaning of s. 4, Partition Act.

S. A. against an order of the District Court, Mandalay, dated April 8, 1938.

Mr. K. C. Sanyal, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. V. Kale, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for partition and possession of a seven-sixteenth share of certain immovable property and for mesne profits in respect of that share. The property in question is known as holding Nos. 8 and 14, Block No. 164, in Pyigyikyethbaya Quarter, Mandalay. It belonged to U Ba, a Zerbadi Muhammadan who died at Mandalay about eight years before the suit, leaving him surviving as heirs his widow Ma Pwa (defendant No. 2), three sons, Maung That Maung Nyein and Maung Mye (defendant No. 1) and two daughters, Ma Bi and Ma Ngwe Bwin.

The plaintiff having obtained a decree against Maung Thet and Ma Nyein had their shares in the property—calculated to be seven-sixteenth—attached and sold in execution and purchased the same at a Court sale in April 1934. They however, have not obtained possession of the share which they bought and consequently filed this suit against Maung Mye and Ma Pwa who are the only two of the heirs of U Ba having present interest in the property in suit. By their written statements the defendants inter alia averred that the property in question being ancestral property was impartible and incapable of partition. This became the subject-matter of a preliminary issue which the trial Court decided in favour of the plaintiffs. Thereafter the trial Court heard the evidence adduced by the parties on other issues including that relating to the quantum of mesne profits. While such evidence was being taken, the defendants raised a plea under s. 4, Partition Act of 1893, thereby assailing the right of the plaintiffs to have the property partitioned. Without the framing of any issue upon this plea the learned trial Judge decided the question thus raised and gave his findings upon the other issues on which evidence was taken. The learned trial Judge upheld the plea under s. 4, Partition Act, and came to certain findings as to the value of the property and the quantum of mesne profits and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in accordance with those findings.

Being dissatisfied with the refusal of the trial Court to grant a decree for partition and with the findings regarding the value of the property and the quantum of mesne profits the plaintiffs appealed to the District Court. The learned District Judge considered that there should have been a full inquiry into the value of the property and the quantum of mesne profits and consequently remanded the case for a full inquiry by a Commissioner on these points. The Commissioner came to practically the same findings as the learned trial Judge who accepted the Commissioner's findings and re-submitted the case to the District Court. The learned District Judge held that s. 4, Partition Act, was applicable and confirmed the findings of the trial Court on the question of the value of the property but slightly modified the finding as to the quantum of mesne profits. The main question for decision in this case is whether the plea raised by the defendants under s. 4, Partition Act, can be maintained. The relevant portion of that section is in sub s. (1) which reads as follows :

"Where a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family has been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family and such transferee sues for partition the Court shall, if any member of the family being a shareholder shall undertake to buy the share of such transferee, make a valuation of such share in such manner as it thinks fit and direct the sale of such share to such share-holder, and may give all necessary and proper directions in that behalf."

The expression "undivided family" means an undivided family whether Hindu Muhammadan, Christian or Buddhist, etc. see Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad (1). The present case will fall within the purview of the section if the property in suit is a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family. A comparison of s. 4 (1), Partition Act with s. 44, T. P. Act helps to make the meaning of the former section much clearer. The latter section provides:

"Where one of two or more co-owners of immovable property, legally competent in that behalf, transfers his share of such property or any interest therein, the transferee acquires, as to such share or interest, and so far as is necessary to give effect to the transfer, the transferor's right to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property, and to enforce a partition of the same, but subject to the conditions and liabilities affecting at the date of the transfer, the share or interest so transferred."

Where the transferee of a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family is not a member of the family, nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle him to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the house."

The rule that can be deduced from these two sections read side by side is, in my opinion, that the transferee of a share in an undivided immovable property is entitled to his transferor's right, the joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property and enforce a partition of the same (para. 1 of s. 44, T. P. Act), but if the subject-matter of the transfer be a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family and the transferee be not a member of the family, (1) he is not entitled to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property (para. 2 of s. 44, T. P. Act), and (2) he cannot be granted a decree for partition in a suit filed by him for that purpose if any member of the family being a share-holder undertakes to buy the share of the transferee (first part of s. 4, Partition Act) in which event, (3) all that is open to the Court to do is to make a valuation of such share and direct the sale of it to such share-holder and give necessary and proper directions in that behalf (second part of s. 4, Partition Act). Thus, the transferee of a share in undivided property is entitled under s. 44, T. P. Act, to his transferor's right to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property in all cases except where the subject-matter of the transfer is a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family of which he (the transferor) is not a member in which case he is not entitled to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the property but is entitled to a partition of the property which however must be denied to him under s. 4, Partition Act in the event of a member of the family being a share-holder undertakes to buy the share of the transferee.

Provisions of s. 4, Partition Act, can be applied to the present case only if the share which the plaintiffs purchased is a share in a "dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family." This expression appearing in s. 4, Partition Act, has been borrowed from s. 44, T. P. Act, see Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad (1) and bears the same meaning. S. 44, T. P. Act, has been designed to prevent the transferee, who is an outsider, from enforcing his way into a dwelling-house in which other members of the transferor's family have a right to live. In Girija Kanta v. Mohim Chandra (2) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court refused to grant the transferee of a two-thirds share in huts used as residence by a joint Hindu family a decree for joint possession with other members of the family. In the course of the judgment the learned Judges observe :

"A stranger to the family should not be placed in actual joint possession of the huts, in which the defendants reside, whatever the strict rights of the plaintiff may be, as purchaser of a two-thirds share of the disputed property."

As Mukerji J., in whose conclusions I respectfully agree, has reviewed almost all available case law on the subject in Nil Kamal v. Kamakshya Charan 109 Ind. Cas. 67 (3) I need not perform the same task again but desire to adopt the following observations of the learned Judge as my own :

"These decisions lay down that the word 'family' as used in the section ought to be given a liberal and comprehensive meaning and it includes a group of persons related in blood, who live in one house under one head or management; that it is not restricted to a body of persons who can trace their descent from a common ancestor; that it is not necessary for the members to constitute an undivided family that they should constantly reside in the dwelling-house, nor is it necessary that they should be joint in mess; that it is sufficient if the members of the family are undivided qua the dwelling-house which they own; that it is the ownership of the dwelling-house and not its actual occupation which brings the operation of the section into play; and that the object of the section is to prevent a transferee of a member of a family who is an outsider from forcing his way into a dwelling-house in which other members of his transferor's family have a right to live."

(2) 20 O W N 675; 35 Ind. Cas. 294; A I R 1916 Cal. 170; 23 O L J 587.

(3) 109 Ind. Cas. 67; A I R 1928 Cal. 539.

Bearing in mind these pronouncements and the object of the enactment of s. 4, Partition Act, I have come to the conclusion that the expression "dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family" refers to the family dwelling-house. It does not mean any house or building for human dwelling belonging to an undivided family. In the present case, there has not only been no evidence to the effect that it was a family dwelling-house but it has transpired in the course of the evidence that the buildings are houses which were for most of the time in the occupation of tenants. The property in question is therefore not a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family within the meaning of s. 4, Partition Act. As regards the findings of the learned District Judge on the question as to the value of the property and as to the quantum of mesne profits I see no reason whatever to interfere with them. Since I have held that s. 4, Partition Act, does not apply there is nothing to show why the appellants should not be granted their rights under para. 1 of s. 44, T. P. Act. They are entitled to a decree for partition of the property in suit. If they obtain the decree for partition of the property in suit the findings of the Courts below regarding the value of the property become unnecessary. For these reasons, I allow this appeal and direct that there shall be a preliminary decree for partition of the seven-sixteenths share in the property in suit and delivery thereof and also for a decree for the mesne profits, as found by the lower Appellate Court in favour of the appellants. The appellants are entitled to their costs in all the Courts.

Criminal trial—Private defence, right of—Accused held had right of private defence and did not exceed that right.

Held, that under the circumstance if the accused hit back and caused injuries to his assailant which ultimately resulted in death, it could not be said that he exceeded the right of private defence, if at the time he inflicted the injuries he did not realise that they were of a very serious nature. The accused, therefore, had in the circumstances a right of private defence which he did not exceed in protecting himself against his assailant.

Or. A. from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Darbhanga, dated January 13 1940.

Messrs. K. K. Banerji and K. P. Varma, for the Appellant.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Varma, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of one Mohamed Habib who has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga, under s. 304 of the I. P. C., and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. Two other persons, Abdul Sattar and Sheikh Salim, stood their trial before the same Court but they have been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge.

The occurrence is said to have taken place on July 19, 1937, at village Andhri which is at a distance of 12 miles from Police Station Darbhanga. On that date the Sub-Assistant Surgeon from village Sakri which is at a distance of 5 miles from Andhri, was summoned to attend to the injuries on Wahab at 8 p. m. He came and gave first-aid and advised them to take the injured person to the hospital. Wahab was taken to the hospital but he died without recovering consciousness. Habib the present appellant happens to be the youngest of four brothers. The eldest was Wahab, the deceased; the next was Razaque; and the third was Sattar. It is said that these brothers have got a cousin Saleem. The prosecution case is that Sattar and Habib were sitting at about 4 p. m. at the door of Saleem. Wahab went there and asked his brothers to take back the registered deed from the Registration Office and then divide the belagan lands, adding that delay would entail fine. The receipt happened to be in the name of Habib. Sattar and Habib refused. Then Wahab asked for the receipt, so that he might take back the document. This led to an altercation and abuses, and on the orders of Ziarul Haque, who is said to be a father-in-law of Habib, to assault, Habib struck Wahab on the head with a lathi, and Saleem struck him on the right wrist. It is said that Sattar and Hafiz, son of Ziarul Haque, also struck Wahab with lathis. Wahab in self defence hit Habib and Sattar. Wahab fell down senseless into a tank close by, and then the others turned on the complainant Razaque and chased him, but he ran away. Majeed is said to have taken out Wahab from the tank, and Wahab was taken to his own house.

The case of the accused is to be gathered from the written statement. The accused did not make any definite statement before the Committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court, although Habib admitted that there was a fight between the four brothers on account of a share of their aunt's property, he did not know who hit whom, nor did he admit having hit anybody in the fracas.

It may be noted that Abdul Razaque was found to have an abrasion with a swelling on the left forearm about two days old. Sattar succeeded in proving that he had an abrasion with a swelling on the left leg, a bruise with swelling on the back of the left knee, a swelling on the left forearm, and also a bruise on the left arm. Habib had a swelling on the left index finger and the thumb, and a swelling on the left forearm. The injuries on Wahab were these; (1) fracture of the right ulna, (2) a lacerated longitudinal wound 2" x $\frac{1}{4}$ " scalp deep on the vault of the skull about 1" to the right of middle line. On dissection there was found ante mortem clot around the wound. The doctor noticed an injury also on the chest but that injury does not seem to have been the result of an assault on Wahab, might have been due to a fall after having received the injuries on the head and the arm. Death, according to the doctor, was due to the injury on the head and the pressure caused on the brain on account of that injury. In the post mortem report the doctor says "the death in my opinion was due to shock and compression due to the head injury."

The trial was with the aid of three assessors. The first assessor was of opinion that Habib was not proved to have hit Wahab on the head, nor that Sattar or Saleem caused grievous hurt to Wahab; the second assessor was of opinion that the charge was not proved and the third assessor was also of the same opinion as the second one.

The First Information Report in this case was lodged not earlier than July 21 1939, at 8 A. M. although the occurrence is said to have taken place on July 19, 1939 at 4 P. M. The learned Sessions Judge has not accepted the defence version of the occurrence inasmuch as he says that it was not proved that the occurrence took place at the field which was the subject matter in dispute. So far as the prosecution version is concerned he considers that the delay in lodging the First Information Report should lessen our confidence in the exactness of the report. Of the eye-witnesses examined in support of the prosecution story, he relies to a certain extent upon the evidence of Zainul (P. W. No. 3) and Sadaruddin (P. W. No. 4); but he does not rely upon the evidence of Sundar Sao (P. W. No. 5). Without going into the details of the evidence, this case can be disposed of on the findings of the learned Judge himself. After having discarded the evidence of one of the eye-witnesses, and that for very good reasons, he was of opinion that it was Wahab, the deceased, who was the aggressor. He says that according to the evidence it was Wahab who first came to the spot carrying a stick, and that Habib and Sattar at the time had no weapons. It was however, not clear from the prosecution evidence when and how they got the weapons. Now, on these findings the question that arises is whether it could be said that the appellant had a right of private defence. Wahab came to the place with a stick in hand. There is no doubt that some injuries were caused to Habib by means of a stick. Under those circumstances, if he hit back and caused injuries to his assailant which ultimately resulted in death, it cannot be said that he exceeded the right of private defence, if at the time he inflicted the injuries he did not realise that they were of a very serious nature. Looking at the nature of the injury caused on the head of Wahab, which ultimately caused the death of Wahab, it appears that the skull was not fractured; and it was due chiefly to the pressure on the brain that death ultimately resulted. It cannot, therefore, be said that the injury inflicted by the appellant on Wahab's head was of an unusually severe nature or that it was intended to be so. It appears, therefore, that the appellant had in the circumstances a right of private defence which he did not exceed in protecting himself against his assailant.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellant and direct that he be acquitted and set at liberty forthwith. His bail bond, if any, will be cancelled.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55 (4) —Purchaser from mortgagor failing to pay mortgagee as stipulated—Property pre-empted by F and transferred to R—None paying mortgagee—R not aware of non-payment—Mortgagor paying amount and bringing suit to recover it—S. 55 (4) held did not apply to R—Decree held could not be passed against R—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 90—Production of certified copies—Presumption.

A mortgagor sold a portion of the mortgaged land to M for certain amount a portion of which was to be paid by M to the mortgagee. One F pre-empted the sale and got a decree on payment of the full purchase money. He then transferred the land to R. Neither M nor F nor R paid the mortgage money due to the mortgagee. The mortgagor was obliged to pay the sum and therefore sued for recovery of the sum. He claimed a decree against R as well as a charge on the property on the basis of the payment made to the mortgagees and also as an 'unpaid vendor. R had notice of the previous mortgage but he was not aware that the mortgage charge remained unpaid till the property was purchased by him.

Held, that the principle of s. 55 (4), T. P. Act, did not apply to R. The mortgagor was therefore entitled to a decree against R and a charge against property in his hands.

No presumption under s. 90, Evi. Act can be raised on the basis of the certified copies. The mere production of the certified copies did not relieve the person producing them from the necessity of producing evidence as regards the execution of the originals. 156 Ind. Judgment.—The material facts of the case giving rise to this second appeal may be briefly stated as follows:—An ancestor of the plaintiff mortgaged the land in dispute along with some other land in favour of Kunj Lal, predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, for Rs. 192 by a registered deed dated August 11, 1899. A further charge of Rs. 400 was created on the same land by another registered deed dated August 4, 1914. On May 29, 1929, the plaintiff sold 2/3rds of the land along with some other land to one Mulk Shah for Rs. 4,000 out of which Rs. 500 were to be paid to the previous mortgagees, namely defendants Nos. 2 and 3. (In the plaint it is stated that the sale was for Rs. 4,500 but it is admitted that the sale was in fact for Rs. 4,000 only). Fatta, defendant No. 4, pre-empted the sale in favour of Mulk Shah and got a decree from the Appellate Court on payment of the full purchase money with costs. A few months later, he transferred the land pre-empted by him to Ram Singh, defendant No. 1. The plaintiff alleged that neither Mulk Shah nor Fatta nor defendant No. 1 paid the mortgage money due to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and that he himself was obliged to pay the sum and therefore sued for recovery of the sum of Rs. 500. He claimed this amount both on the basis of the payment made to the mortgagees and also as an 'unpaid vendor.' The trial Court dismissed the suit but on appeal the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has granted a decree for Rs. 500 against Fatta, defendant No. 4, only. From this decision the plaintiff has preferred the present appeal and his contention is that he was entitled to a decree for the aforesaid sum against Ram Singh, defendant No. 1, and that the same should also have been made a charge on the property sold to Ram Singh.

Before proceeding to the merits of the case, it is necessary to deal with the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant that certain documents, namely copies of the mortgage deeds of 1899 and 1914, were wrongly rejected by the Courts below. It appears that these certified copies were produced in the trial Court but no evidence was led with respect to them. The appellant apparently relied on s. 90, Evi. Act, for a presumption being raised as regards the due execution of the original mortgage-deeds; but as the originals were not forthcoming, it seems clear from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Bajan

Singh v. Brij Raj Saran Singh (1) that no presumption under s. 90 could be raised on the basis of the certified copies. It is not disputed that no evidence was led as regards the certified copies of the mortgage deeds. The mere production of the certified copies did not relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of producing evidence as regards the execution of the originals: vide Chuhamal v. Rahim Baksh, 71 Ind. Cas. 568 (2). In these circumstances, it seems to me that the Courts below were right in holding that these copies were not duly proved and they were rightly returned. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge was also right in holding that there were no reasons for admitting additional evidence with respect to these certified copies under O. XXI, r. 27, Civil P. O., as the plaintiff had ample opportunity of producing the necessary evidence in the trial Court.

Coming to the merits of the case, the main contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant is that Ram Singh, defendant, had notice of the previous mortgage as well as the non-payment of the mortgage money and therefore the appellant was entitled to claim the sum of Rs. 500 from Ram Singh as a charge on the property sold. He relied in this respect on the principle laid down in s. 55 (4), T. P. Act. There seems to be sufficient evidence on the record to show that Ram Singh had knowledge of the previous mortgage. The plaint in the pre-emption suit instituted by Fatta was actually written by Ram Singh, who is a peon writer. Ram Singh has also admitted that the sale-deed in favour of Muik Shah was seen by him. This sale-deed also mentions the mortgages in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The real point for consideration, therefore, is whether Ram Singh was aware that the mortgage charge remained unpaid till the property was purchased by him. The pre-emption decree was on payment of the full purchased money, namely Rs. 4,000 with costs, as stated above. This amount had been deposited by Fatta in Court and as a result Fatta acquired title as full owner (see O. XX, r. 14, Civil P. O.). It is alleged that Fatta subsequently withdrew a sum of Rs. 500 out of the sum deposited by him. It is not clear why Fatta was allowed to withdraw this sum but in any case the fact remains that Fatta had obtained a valid title by depositing the full purchase money in Court in accordance with the decree passed in his favour. It was this title which he conveyed to Ram Singh subsequently, and it has been found that Ram Singh also paid the full purchase money, namely Rs. 4,000 to Fatta. There is nothing on the record to show that Ram Singh was aware at the time of the sale in his favour that the sum of Rs. 500 which was due to the mortgagees had been withdrawn and not been paid to them by Fatta. In view of the fact that Fatta had deposited the full purchase money, Ram Singh would have been justified in inferring that the mortgage money had been paid to the mortgagees. In the absence of any clear evidence as to his knowledge of the withdrawal of the sum of Rs. 500 by Fatta and the non-payment of that sum to the mortgagees, the principle of s. 55 (4), T. P. Act, will not, I think, apply to Ram Singh. I therefore hold that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge was right in not granting a decree for Rs. 500 against Ram Singh. As regards the payment of the mortgage charge by plaintiff to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 I do not think any separate cause of action accrued to plaintiff. The payment of the mortgage charge simply wiped out the mortgage. All that the plaintiff could claim in the circumstances was damages for breach of contract from the original vendee or at the most against Fatta, who took the property by pre-emption. He has already been granted a decree for Rs. 500 against Fatta. In view of the facts described above, I do not think he is entitled to claim any relief against Ram Singh. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

s. Appeal dismissed.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 1 Madan Theatres Ltd., against a decision of the Civil Judge of Mohanlalganj against them decreeing a suit of the plaintiff Narayan Das.

There was originally a second defendant but he is not a party to the appeal and we are not concerned with him.

The plaintiff took the rights of the distribution of a film "Sukhi Lutera" for the U. P. and Delhi Provinces. The defendant-appellant owned the film and was to hand over two copies of it to the plaintiff, who was to make arrangements with various cinemas that the film might be shown there. An agreement, which is Ex. A-1 was entered into on March 5, 1934, and gave the plaintiff the right for two years to lease the film to cinemas in the area already stated. The plaintiff was a distributor under the name of the Surree Visnuu Talkies and he had to pay Rs. 15,000 to the appellant; Rs. 3,000 were to be paid on March 3, 1934, Rs. 3,000 were to be paid on receipt of the railway receipt of the film and the balance of Rs. 9,000 was to be paid by five equal monthly instalments of Rs. 1,800, the first instalment becoming payable in the first week of May, 1934, and the last, therefore, being payable in the first week of September, 1934. Admittedly this last instalment was not paid then and has in fact never been paid. The reason given for not paying it is that the plaintiff thought that the takings had been so bad that he would never get Rs. 15,000 before the end of the year. Under para. 8 of the agreement the plaintiff as distributor was to lease the film to cinemas for 60 per cent. of the takings for the first run, 50 per cent. for the second run and 40 per cent. for the third and subsequent runs. From these takings he was entitled to 10 per cent. for himself, the balance going to the appellant. Under para. 18 of the agreement if the takings did not amount to Rs. 15,000 within one year from the date of the agreement, the plaintiff had the right to recover the debt from the appellant. The case of the plaintiff, therefore, is that by September, 1934, he guessed that Rs. 15,000 would not be recovered from cinemas as takings and, therefore, the difference between Rs. 15,000 and the actual takings would have to be returned to him by the appellant so that it was unnecessary for him to make this last payment. The Court below has found that this was no justification for not paying the last instalment, and the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has not really disputed the correctness of the decision of the lower Court. We have it, therefore, that the plaintiff did not fully comply with the terms of the contract. On failure to comply with any of the terms of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, the appellant was, according to this agreement, entitled under para. 4 to stop the screening of the film, to take possession of all copies of the film in possession of the plaintiff, to forfeit all the money paid by the plaintiff without affecting the right to sue for the money and under para. 17 to cancel the above agreement after giving a fortnight's notice. In fact none of these things was done.

It has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant that his client did forfeit the money, but he has not been able to point to any document or oral evidence showing that there was such forfeiture. It is clear from Ex. B-1, D. W. No. 1, a letter from the appellant, dated December 4, 1934, that he had not forfeited anything for he then merely asked for that last instalment which in reality should have been paid in the month of September. The learned Civil Judge came to the conclusion that there was waiver by the appellant of the rights which we have enumerated above and, he, therefore, went into the evidence of accounts and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to the amount claimed which consisted of the balance between Rs. 13,200 actually paid by the plaintiff towards the sum of Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 7,971-14-0 consideration of takings, thus arriving at the principal sum Rs. 5,222-2-0 plus Rs. 77-14-0 as interest by way of damages.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged before us that the suit was premature or without cause of action as the film did not run for a full year. He urges that it was the duty of the plaintiff under para. 3 of the agreement to continue screening the said film in the territory and stations allotted during the period stipulated above (i. e., one year) and as he did not do so he is not entitled to maintain the suit.

This point is first raised in this Court for we find no mention of it anywhere before. Apart from that, the appellant relies merely on the statement of P. W. No. 1 that the film was kept in use till January or February 1935, as meaning that after that period and up to March 5, 1935, the film was not shown anywhere. The exact date when the film was no longer shown is not given, and if we are to take it as being the end of February there were only some five days left. The plaintiff had no cinema of his own in which to show the film but he had to find cinema manager willing to take it and if he tried his best and they would not take it, it could not possibly be said that he had broken his contract. It was only if he was negligent that it could be said that he had not carried out the terms contained in para. 3 of the agreement, and there is no evidence that he was negligent for, as we have said, the point was never raised before. We are unable, therefore, to find that because the film did not appear in any cinema between the end of February and March 5, this was a breach of the contract by plaintiff.

The next point urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that the film has never been returned and the claim of the plaintiff should not have been allowed without an order for the return of the film. This appears in para. 8 of the memorandum of appeal in this Court and the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent says that he has no objection to the decree in favour of his client being made conditional on the return of such copies of the films as his client has.

The next point urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant is the most important one. He urges that the failure of the plaintiff to pay the last instalment prevents him from maintaining this suit at all. There is no doubt that under the contract the appellant was given the right to do various things, which we have already stated, among others that of forfeiting the money already paid, but we are unable to find that he did in fact exercise any of his rights and we agree, therefore, with the decision of the lower Court that he waived those rights and if there was any breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, the appellant would only be entitled to damages and he has distinctly stated that he would sue for those separately. We are satisfied that the provision that the money already paid could be forfeited is a penalty, for a right to forfeit as in the present case, sum of Rs. 13,000 because of the non-payment of the last instalment of Rs. 1,800, is obviously a penalty and cannot be compared with the forfeiture of a small sum paid in advance. In cases of penalty, Steedman v. Drinkle (A I R 1915 P O 94) (1), shows that only a reasonable sum can be claimed, but in this case not even a reasonable sum can be claimed because that reasonable sum will be the damages for which the appellant says he will sue separately, and presumably for this reason he gave no indication as to what this reasonable sum would be. The position, therefore, is reduced to this: what did the plaintiff actually realise and then what is the difference between the sum realised and the Rs. 15,000 minus the last instalment, for, he was entitled to recover this difference under the terms of the agreement. The plaintiff has stated on oath that as shown by the accounts which he has put in and by certain vouchers given him by cinema managers the amount is that which he has claimed in the plaint. We have, therefore, his statement on oath as to the amount which is supported by a book of accounts, Ex. 108, which contains items of takings as well as other items, and he has also filed vouchers on papers belonging to various cinemas which purport to be the actual takings. By filing these accounts and the vouchers of these cinemas he has given an opportunity to the defendant-appellant to prove that he has not admitted receipt of monies which are not contained either in this account book or in these vouchers, but the defendant has produced no evidence to show that any other amount was realised. It was also the duty of the plaintiff under para. 11 of the agreement to submit regularly the booking of the film and accounts of the takings with statements of ticket sales signed by the managers of the cinemas and countersigned by the distributor. The plaintiff has sworn that he did submit these accounts which, it is clear from this statement, would be statements similar to those vouchers which he has submitted in this case, for he says that one set of vouchers he kept and the other set of vouchers he sent to the appellant. Against this evidence on oath by the plaintiff supported, at any rate, to some extent by his accounts and these vouchers, the defendant has not given any evidence by coming into the witness-box and saying that he received no such accounts. The nearest he has got to giving evidence was that defendant No. 2 stated that defendant No. 1 did not send these vouchers to him and, therefore, he came to the conclusion that none were submitted by the plaintiff to defendant No. 1. This evidence obviously is entirely useless. The learned Counsel for the appellant also asks us to hold that Ex. B-7, a letter by the plaintiff to the appellant, which states that the "cheque of instalment together with upto date account of statements shall be sent to you by tomorrow as soon as completed" means that no such accounts had been submitted by that time. In the first place we are not prepared to hold that this amounts to anything more than what it says, namely, that full accounts up to the date of that letter had not yet been submitted, and we cannot presume that no accounts at all had been submitted up to that date much less that the promise to submit whatever accounts had not yet been submitted, on the following day was not carried out. We consider that the plaintiff had discharged the burden which lay on him to submit prima facie proof of the amount which he had actually received, and in the absence of anything to make us doubt his statement on oath reinforced by the documents he has produced, we are entitled to accept it.

The last point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bengal Nagpur Railway Company Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji (65 I A 66) (2), no sum should have been decreed as interest as it was not within the contract nor was such interest by way of damages and nor was it specifically provided for by statute. We accept this contention with the result that the decree of the Court below is modified only in that the plaintiff is only entitled to execute his decree after the return of such copies of the film as he has and he is only entitled to Rs. 5,222-2-0 and not also to Rs. 77-14 interest. As the appellant was disputing the decree of the Court which decreed Rs. 5,300 against him and has only succeeded as regards Rs. 77-14 and an order for the return of the two films which are probably of little use as he has never asked for them back, we think this is a fit case in which the respondent should be allowed his costs.

We, therefore, allow only to the extent stated above, this appeal but allow the respondent his costs

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 14, s. 11—Lease by mortgagee back to mortgagor, part of mortgage transaction and merely machinery for realizing interest—Suit for rent under lease—Under decree in such suit equity of redemption, when can be sold—Decision of issue between parties in prior execution proceedings under different and anterior decree—Similar matter at similar stage in subsequent suit, if can be raised.

When a lease back is part of a transaction of mortgage and is merely a piece of machinery for realizing the interest on the mortgage, a suit for rent under that lease would in fact be a suit to realize the interest on the mortgage and under a decree in such a suit the equity of redemption could not be brought to sale unless the suit was actually framed as a suit on the mortgage. The fact that the mortgage was on one day and the lease on the next day has very little bearing on the question whether the lease and the mortgage form part of the same transaction. Nor the fact that an advance by way of security for rent was paid necessarily makes the lease something separable from the mortgage. Similarly the fact that the lease is expressed as ending on the same date as the date on which the right of redemption begins, is a clear indication that both the deeds form part of one and the same transaction.

The decision of an issue between the same parties in a prior execution petition under a different and anterior decree, is the decision of a question arising in part of the proceedings in one suit and an attempt to raise the same matter at a similar stage of the proceedings in a subsequent suit will be barred by res judicata.

A. against the appellate orders of the Sub-Judge, South Malabar at Palghat, in A. S. Nos. 32 and 31 of 1937, respectively.

Messrs. K. Kuttikrishna Menon and K. V. Gopalakrishna Nair, for the Appellants.
Messrs. P. S. Narayanaswami Iyer and P. R. Narayana Iyer, for the Respondent.

Judgment.— These appeals arise out of an order allowing the execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by a usufructuary mortgagee against his mortgagor who is the lessee of the hypotheca. In the execution petition the mortgagee sought to bring to sale the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property in order to realize the decree for arrears of rent. An objection which was disallowed in the lower Appellate Court, was based on O. XXXIV, r. 14, Civil P. C., to the effect that the decree was in fact a decree for payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage and that therefore the decree-holder was not entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage.

The appellant (mortgagor lessee) mortgaged his property usufructuarly to the respondent by a deed dated November 30, 1930 and by another deed dated December 1, 1930 the mortgagee leased the property back to the mortgagor. The mortgage itself provides for redemption on 1st Kumbham 1107 or any date up to the 30th of that month or during the same period in successive years. The lease is for a period of one year ending on 1st Kumbham 1107 on which date the lessee undertakes to surrender the property. The liabilities undertaken by the mortgagee in respect of Govt. revenue, michavaram etc., under the mortgage deed are the subject of special covenants in the lease deed. The question of the relation between the lease and this mortgage has come up for consideration in a previous litigation arising out of the lease. The rent due under the lease deed was not paid and the lessor-mortgagee filed a small cause suit for the arrears and got a decree which was executed on the original side of the Sub-Court. In execution the decree-holder sought to bring to sale the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property. An objection was preferred on the strength of O. XXXIV, r. 14, Civil P. C. On this petition the Subordinate Judge passed orders holding that the application for sale was barred under O. XXXIV, r. 14, and allowed the objection petition. The judgment in this matter is Ex. A. The execution with which we are now concerned was under the decree in a later suit, O. S. No. 215 of 1934, the appears in question being arrears of rent for years subsequent to the year actually covered by the lease. The execution petition was filed in the Court of the District Munsif and the same objection under O. XXXIV, r. 14 was taken to the application to bring to sale the equity of redemption. It was also objected that the application was barred by res judicata by reason of the former order Ex. A. The trial Court upheld the objection but the learned Subordinate Judge has allowed the execution to proceed.

It is, I think, well established that when a lease back is part of a transaction of mortgage and is merely a piece of machinery for realizing the interest on the mortgage, a suit for rent under that lease would in fact be a suit to realize the interest on the mortgage and under a decree in such a suit the equity of redemption could not be brought to sale unless the suit was actually framed as a suit on the mortgage. It is however contended that this lease must not be regarded as part of the mortgage transaction and that it is an entirely separate transaction on a different date with features which indicate an intention that it should not be merely a portion of the mortgage transaction. The differences upon which the learned Subordinate Judge relies are as follows: Firstly there is an interval of one day between the two deeds. Secondly, there is the difference in the period of the lease which is for one year only, whereas the mortgage is redeemable at the end of the same period or at subsequent dates. Thirdly there is the fact that the lease provides for the payment of what is called kattakanam which, I am informed, means an advance paid as security for future rents. It seems to me that the fact that the mortgage was on one day and the lease on the next day has very little bearing on the question whether the lease and the mortgage form part of the same transaction, more especially in the circumstances of the present case wherein the standing crops on the land were to be reaped by the mortgagor, so that both the full possession of the property and the actual effect of the lease were to begin at a subsequent date when the standing crops were harvested. Nor do I think the fact that an advance by way of security for rent was paid necessarily makes the lease something separable from the mortgage. And as to the difference in the term the fact that the lease is expressed as ending on the same date as the date on which the right of redemption begins, is to my mind a clear indication that both the deeds form part of one and the same transaction. Reading these two documents together I have no doubt in fact that they are both part of the same bargain and that the lease was intended to implement the undertakings of the mortgage. Instead of providing for a simple mortgage with payment of interest in cash, the common device was employed of drafting the mortgage as a usufructuary mortgage and making the mortgagor a tenant paying rent. The transaction was in its essence a mortgage in which the interest was collected in the shape of rent.

Moreover, it seems to me that it is not open to the respondent to contest the identity of the transaction of lease with the transaction of mortgage. The matter was thrashed out at length between the same parties in connexion with the same transaction in the execution petition in a former suit for rent. It is contended that though the principle of res judicata applies to successive execution petitions in the same suit under the same decree, there is not res judicata in respect of a decision in an execution petition under a former decree when the same matter arises for decision in an execution petition under a subsequent decree. This contention seems to me to overlook the essential basis of the rulings with reference to the applicability of the principle of res judicata to proceedings in execution. The difficulty which arose in applying the principle of res judicata to execution proceedings arose from the fact that successive execution petitions in the same suit could not be regarded strictly speaking as decisions in successive suits between the same parties. Therefore, in terms, s. 11, Civil P. C., had no application. But it was held that though the precise rule embodied in s. 11 did not apply, the parties were governed by the principle that when in one stage of a suit a matter had been finally decided, the same matter could not be agitated again in a subsequent stage of the same suit. But when we are concerned with the decision of an issue between the same parties in a prior execution petition under a different and anterior decree, this difficulty does not arise. What we have is the decision of a question arising in part of the proceedings in one suit and an attempt to raise the same matter at a similar stage of the proceedings in a subsequent suit. The principle of s. 11 applies directly and it is unnecessary to call in aid the reasoning of the Privy Council in Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1) and subsequent cases as to the application of the same rule by analogy to successive stages of the same suit.

The most that can be said for the decree-holder is that the order Ex. A, in the former proceedings only decided that the lease in this case was part of the transaction of mortgage and that in execution of the decree for arrears under that lease the hypotheca could not be brought to sale; whereas now we are concerned with the execution of the decree for arrears due from the tenant holding over after the expiry of the lease. So that the question is not precisely the same. But in so far as it involves a decision as to the oneness of the transaction of lease with the transaction of mortgage, the matter cannot in my opinion be re-opened between the parties. I do not think that it makes any difference to the applicability of O. XXXIV, r. 14 that we are now concerned with arrears of rent due from a tenant holding over after the expiry of the term of the lease. The relation between the parties is still governed by the terms of this lease even though the original period fixed has expired. The rent claimed is still in its essence a sum of money due under the mortgage. Therefore, O. XXXIV, r. 44, still applies.

It is however argued that in so far as the decree is a decree for costs this Rule will have no application and the respondent quotes the case in Haribans Rai v. Srinivasa (2). That case is not quite an authority for the position which the respondent takes up. It was a case of a usufructuary mortgagee who was not given possession of the hypotheca and sued for possession and incidentally got a decree both for possession and for costs. It was held that the decree so far as it related to costs was not a decree for money due under the mortgage and that therefore O. XXXIV, r. 14 did not bar its execution by the sale of the hypotheca. The position however is somewhat different here. It is true that the mortgagee is suing for possession but his substantial claim is for arrears of rent and those arrears are, in the view I have taken, an essential part of the mortgage amount. By the analogy of O. XXXIV, r. 10 the decree in so far as it is a decree for costs must be deemed to be added to the claim under the mortgage even though the suit is not in terms a suit based on the mortgage. I do not think that there are any grounds for separating the costs on the relief for possession from the costs in the rest of the suit. The essential thing which the mortgagee wishes to recover is the money due from his tenant which is in effect the interest due on his mortgage. This he cannot recover by sale of the equity of redemption otherwise than under a mortgage decree. In this view I allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the order of the District Munsif dismissing the execution petition and allowing the objection with costs throughout (in A. A. A. O. No. 121 of 1937 only). Leave granted.

In the case of a prosecution under s. 18, U. P.
Prev. of Adulteration Act previous conviction for selling adulterated ghee would be relevant to show intention. Rex v. Armstrong (1), relied on.

In the case of a prosecution under s. 18, it is for the accused to take the plea that his shop is not such a manufactory, shop, or place in which ghee is manufactured, under s. 242, Criminal P. O., in the trial Court. If he fails to do this, he cannot raise it for the first time in revision.

The words "in which ghee is manufactured" in
s. 18 apply to the three previous things mentioned that is "manufactory, shop or place." If this were not so, then it would be an offence to keep any substance to be used for the adulteration of such ghee in any kind of a factory or any kind of a shop. That cannot be what was intended by the Legislature, but the Legislature did intend that the manufactory or the shop were those in which ghee was manufactured.

The Deputy Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Bennet, J.—This is a criminal reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Aligarh in regard to a conviction of Ohhanga Mal under s. 18, U. P. Prev. of Adulteration Act (Act VI of 1912) and a fine of Rs. 150 and Rs. 48-12-0 as expenses or in default of payment one month's rigorous imprisonment. The case was tried summarily and was a summons case. The Criminal P. O., s. 242 provides as follows:

"When the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted; but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge."

In accordance with this Section the Magistrate apparently explained the report of the Sanitary Inspector to the accused.
This report set out that accused had in his shop certain canisters containing moong phali or groundnut oil and certain canisters containing ghee and the keeping of these two sets of canisters was contrary to s. 18 of the Act. The accused filed a written statement in which ground 2 sets out that groundnut oil cannot be mixed in ghee and the Court might examine this itself. Enmity was also alleged with the Sanitary Inspector. No other defence was taken. The accused orally admitted in the statement to the Court that some canisters contained ghee and other canisters contained moong phali oil. The first report also set out that one month before the date now charged the accused had been fined Rs. 71-15-6 on September 19, 1938, for selling adulterated ghee. This previous conviction would be relevant to show intention following the well-known ruling in Rex v. Armstrong (1).
The accused was convicted and afterwards he made an application in revision to the Sessions Judge. That revision proceeds on the same grounds as his written statement.
The learned Sessions Judge however took an entirely new ground that the Section requires that the shop should be one in which ghee is manufactured and the Sessions Judge states:

"Clearly the shop of the applicant was not such a manufactory, shop or place in which ghee is manufactured and therefore s. 18 does not apply and therefore the applicant has been wrongly convicted."

Learned Counsel for the applicant is quite unable to show any thing on the record in support of this finding of the Sessions Judge that the shop of the applicant is not a place in which ghee is manufactured. We adjourned this case for an interval to allow learned Counsel to produce the licence and conditions under which the accused has his shop for sale of ghee, but learned Counsel merely produced licence receipts of payments. On the back of those receipts it is stated that there are conditions of which a copy is given to the applicant, but such conditions are not produced before us. It is therefore not possible to see whether or not there is in the conditions permission to manufacture ghee in the shop. In any case, it was for the accused to raise this point under s. 242, Criminal P. C., in the trial Court. As accused did not raise the point in the trial Court he cannot raise it now in revision.

The learned Single Judge who referred this matter to this Bench desired a pronouncement on the point as to be interpretation of s. 18, U. P. Prev. of Adulteration Act. We are of opinion that the words "in which ghee is manufactured" do apply to the three previous things mentioned, that is, "manufactory, shop or place." If this were not so, then it would be an offence to keep any substance to be used for the adulteration of such ghee in any kind of a factory or any kind of a shop. We do not think that that is what was intended by the Legislature, but the Legislature did intend that the manufactory or the shop were those in which ghee was manufactured.

In the U. P. Prev. of Adulteration (Amendment) Act, 1930, this s. 18 is introduced and the marginal note is "prohibiting of adulterants in places where ghee is manufactured or sold." It is clear from this marginal note that the Legislature intended to prevent the adulterant being kept either in the place where ghee was manufactured or in the place where ghee was sold. But in the text after the words "in which ghee is manufactured" in sub-s. (1) the words "or sold" are omitted. It appears that the omission of these words "or sold" is a mere verbal error in the Amending Act, otherwise the words would not appear in the margin. This Court cannot take the words in the margin as amounting to law and the Court must follow the text. It is clear that the Act requires further amendment if the intention in the margin is to be carried out. But the marginal note also shows that it was not the intention to interpret sub-s. (1) by omitting to apply the qualifying words to the first two places mentioned, namely manufactory and shop. As the text stands the qualifying words do apply to the shop. Under the circumstances of this case we consider that the conviction by the Magistrate is correct and we refuse this reference and return the record to the Court below.

App. for revision of the order of the Munsif of Kheri dated December 14, 1936.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench

Radha Krishna, J.—(December 13, 1939).—The facts which gave rise to this application are that on May 28, 1935, Seth Pearey Lal, the predecessor-in-interest of the opposite party, obtained a decree from the Court of the Munsif of Kheri against the applicant for a sum of Rs. 600 with costs and future interest on the basis of a promissory note dated July 30, 1929. The applicant had set forth in para. 9 of his written statement that he was an agriculturist and claimed reduction in interest on that ground. His claim to be an agriculturist was disputed by the plaintiff opposite party. Subsequently the applicant's Counsel admitted the claim and a decree as stated above was passed.

On April 25, 1936, the applicant made an application under s. 30 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act for the amendment of the said decree by reduction of interest in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 30. This application was opposed by the decree-holder on the ground that the prayer in the application was barred by the principle of res judicata and that sub-s. (2) of s. 30 applied to the decree passed between January 1, 1930, and the date on which the Agri. Relief Act came into force. It may be mentioned here that the said Act came into force on April 30, 1935. Certain other objections were also raised by the opposite party.

raised by the opposite party—

1. Is the application not maintainable as alleged in para. 2 of the written statement?
2. Is the application barred by res judicata as alleged in para. 1 of the written statement?

It decided them against the applicant and dismissed the application. Against the said order the applicant has come up to this Court in revision.

The contention on behalf of the applicant is that the words "If a decree has already been passed" in cl. (2) of s. 30 refer to any decree passed before the date of the application for amendment and are not confined to decrees before the enactment of the Act. His further contention is that no question of res judicata arises on this view.

I have heard the learned Counsel for the parties at length. The decision of the case turns upon whether the words "If a decree has already been passed" used in cl. (2) of s. 30 refer to decrees passed before the Act came into force or include even those decrees which were passed on dates prior to the application for amendment even though subsequent to the passing of the Act.

I am inclined to think that on the clear language of the section the words referred to above apply only to decrees passed before the Act. Clause (1) of s. 30 lays down a rule of substantive law enacted by the U. P. Agri. Relief Act regulating the rate of interest on a loan taken before, the Act came into force for the period from January 1, 1930. The Act, as stated before, came into force from April 30, 1935, so cl. (2) was enacted for the purpose of enabling those debtors against whom decrees had been passed before that date to obtain the benefit of cl. (1). In respect of suits to be filed after April 30, 1935, the Legislature must naturally have assumed that debtors would be in a position to claim the reduction in interest as allowed by the Act. It has been contended that the Legislature by cl. (1) laid down that no loan shall carry interest at a higher rate than specified therein and the absolute privilege granted by this sub-section would be defeated if the debtor was debarred from making an application for reduction as provided in cl. (2) in cases where the decree was passed after the Act came into force. It is true that there is nothing in the Act which prohibits the judgmentdebtor in express terms from making an application for reduction of interest in case where a decree has been passed after the Act at any time till it remains unsatisfied in whole or in part, but the Legislature must have been fully aware of the general principles of res judicata applicable to all suits and proceedings, and I am not prepared to accept in the absence of such an express provision that the Legislature intended to abrogate the principle of res judicata so far as applications for reduction of interest were concerned. It is further true that the Act was specifically enacted to give relief to agriculturist debtors but I find it difficult to agree with the contention that that intention would be frustrated if the interpretation urged by the opposite party is accepted. The Act made an adequate provision for reduction of interest in cases in which decrees had already been passed before the Act came into force by means of cl. (2); and in cases of suits filed after the Act came into force it would be most reasonable to suppose that the debtors would take advantage of the provisions contained in cl. (1). We cannot impute an intention to the Legislature to force the advantages of the Act upon a sleeping or negligent debtor. In the absence of any express provision to the contrary the principle of res judicata would in my opinion be applicable to the proceedings of an application for reduction of interest under cl. (2).

It has been further argued that the words "If a decree has already been passed" necessarily refer to a point of time and that it would be most logical and reasonable to discover that point of time in cl. (2) itself. The only point of time contemplated in cl. (2) is the date of the application for amendment and, therefore, the words "If a decree has already been passed" refer to the date of the application and not to the date when the Act came into force. In my opinion, in interpreting the said words, cls. (1) and (2) should be read together. Clause (2) is really a part of cl. (1) and was enacted to give effect to the rule of law laid down in cl. (1) in cases where decrees had already been passed, and the opportunity for claiming reduction of interest was not otherwise available.

The anomaly created by accepting the interpretation put forward by the learned Counsel for the appellant is most clearly brought out in the present case. In contesting the suit the applicant judgment-debtor claimed in his written statement to be an agriculturist and entitled to reduction of interest as provided by cl. (1). He could not substantiate his claim to be an agriculturist and admitted the claim of the plaintiff opposite party with the result that a decree for the full amount was passed. In the present application for reduction of interest can the judgment-debtor be allowed to raise the same question which must be taken to have been impliedly decided against him in the suit? If the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant is accepted, it would be open to the judgment-debtor to re-agitate the question of his being an agriculturist although that question may have been decided on merits in the suit, which would in my opinion be a wholly untenable position.

The contention of the learned Counsel for the applicant is amply supported by the following decisions of the Allahabad High Court:

1. Baryar Singh v. Ram Dularey, (1936 Allahabad Law Journal, 1309, (1), 2. Narain Singh v. Banke Behari Lal, (I. L. R. 1937 Allahabad 943-A, I. R. 1937 All. 753) (2), 3. Hafiz Abdul Noor v. Sahu Brij Mohan Saran, (A. I. R. 1938 Allahabad 153, I. L. R. 1938 All., 305) (3).

With great respect to the learned Judges who decided the above cases, I find great difficulty in accepting their view. The question involved for decision is of considerable importance. There is no decision of this Court on the point that I know of. I, therefore, refer the following question for decision of a Full Bench of this Court under s. 14 (1) of the Oudh Courts Act:—

"Do the words 'If a decree has already been passed' in cl. (2) of s. 30 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act (XXVII of 1934) refer only to decrees passed before that Act came into force or even to decrees passed before the date on which an application for reduction of interest is made under cl. (2) of s. 30 by the judgment-debtor?"

Opinion of the Full Bench

Yorke, J.—(April 2, 1940.)—The question which has been referred to this Full Bench is as follows:

"Do the words 'if a decree has already been passed' in cl. (2) of s. 30 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act (XXVII of 1934) refer only to decrees passed before that Act came into force or even to decrees passed before the date on which an application for reduction of interest is made under cl. (2) of s. 30 by the judgment-debtor?"

The matter has arisen in this way. The late plaintiff Seth Pearey Lal now represented by Mst. Mangala Devi instituted in 1935 a suit to recover the balance due on a pro-note for Rs. 4,000 dated July 30, 1929. After the institution of the suit on April 30, 1935, the Agri. Relief Act came into force. On May 14, 1935, the present judgment-debtor applicant Nawab Syed Kazim Husain filed a written statement, in para. 9 of which he claimed a reduction of interest under what he called the new Act, evidently referring to s. 30 (1) of the Agri. Relief Act. On May 28, 1935, certain statements were made by Counsel. The defendant's Counsel admitted that the amount of Rs. 600 was due and also agreed to future interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and the suit was decreed for Rs. 600 with costs and future interest. In effect the defendant consented to a decree, and thereby gave up his claim to be an agriculturist and entitled to reduced interest.

On April 25, 1936, the defendant made an application, to the same Court which had passed the decree, under s. 30 (2) of the Agri. Relief Act asking for amendment of the decree and reduction of interest. Two defences were taken, namely that in view of the consent decree of May 28, 1935, the application was barred by the rule of res judicata, and secondly that s. 30 (2) had no application to cases in which the decree was passed after the Act came into force. The learned Munsif upheld both the contentions of the decree-holder and rejected the application as not maintainable at all.

On the matter coming up before one of the members of this Bench, the question of the proper interpretation of s. 30 (2) of the Act was strenuously argued before him, and he accordingly made a reference in the term stated above.

Learned Counsel for the judgment-debtor applicant has rested his case in the main on three decisions of the High Court at Allahabad, two of them Single Judge cases, and the third a decision of a Bench. In Baryar Singh v. Ram Dularey, (1936 A. L. J. R. 1309) (1) it was held by Bennett, J., that a judgment-debtor can in the case of a decree passed after the coming into force of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act apply for relief under s. 30 (?) of the Act. His view was based on two considerations, first, that if the intention of the legislature had been to limit the application of the section to cases in which a decree had been passed before the Act came into force, s. 30 (2) would not have been worded in the form in which we find it, namely "if a decree has already been passed" but the wording should have been "if a decree has already been passed before this Act comes into force." Secondly, he thought that a defendant should not be deprived of relief under this Act merely because his legal advisers were not aware of the law on the point during the pendency of the suit. He considered that it was more natural in dealing with agriculturists to give them relief both during the suit and also after the decree, and legislation of this nature should be construed liberally to give the intention of the Act as much force as possible. It would thus appear that he interpreted cls. 30 (1) and 30 (2) as giving an agriculturist debtor liable under loans taken before this Act came into force two opportunities to claim the relief set forth in s. 30 (1) of the Act, one opportunity at the time of suit and one opportunity by application for amendment of the decree after a decree had been passed, and evidently he would not, on his construction of the section, have held that a debtor who had pleaded s. 30 (1) unsuccessfully in a suit to be thereby debarred from getting amendment under s. 30 (2).

In Narain Singh v. Banke Behari Lal (I. L. R. 1937 All. 943) (2) it was held that the words "already been passed" had reference to the date upon which the application under s. 30 was made. It was conceded that s. 30 (2) was rather ambiguously drafted; but it was said that

"having regard to the policy of the legislature in the matter of giving relief to all debtors against whom decrees on loans were passed whether before or after the passing of the Act, the sub-section cannot be interpreted to mean that in suits decided after the Act came into force the defendant is bound to apply for relief under s. 30 before the decree is passed and that if he fails to do so any future application after the decree has been passed would be barred by s. 11 of the Civil P. O."

The learned Judge remarked that until decree has been passed there is no necessity to apply for relief, and that even after the passing of the decree the defendant may not desire to apply immediately for relief, and that in his view there was no reason for holding that in these circumstances the defendant was barred for all time from claiming such relief.

The matter was considered again by a Bench of two Judges in Abdul Noor v. Brijmohan Saran, (I. L. R. 1938 All. 305) (3) where the view taken in these two previous cases was upheld. The learned Judges who decided this case examined the provisions of the four sections making up this Chapter, and they apparently based their view in regard to the provisions of s. 30 on the view taken by them in regard to the provisions of s. 28. In this connection they remarked:

"It is important to bear in mind that in the Act itself there are no provisions as to when a debtor has to make an application asking for a reduction of interest. In respect of loans contracted after the Act came into force it is open to the debtor to make his application for reducing interest either when a decree is going to be passed or any time after the decree whenever it is sought to be enforced against him. There is nothing in the Act which prohibits a debtor from making such an application after the decree has been passed and this applies to both kinds of cases, that is to cases in which the loan was taken after the Act came into force and also to the loan taken before."

Sections 28, 29 and 31 of this Act all deal with interest on loans taken after the passing of the Act. Section 28 provides for the rate of interest on loans taken after the passing of this Act above which the debtor is not liable to pay. Section 29 provides for benefit for prompt payment of loans taken after the passing of this Act, and s. 31 provides for the rate of interest on loans taken after the Act comes into force after the aggregate of interest has reached 100 per cent. of the sum borrowed. In none of these three sections is there any provision corresponding to s. 30 (2), and the reason of this obviously is that there is no necessity for any such provision inasmuch as a plea based on these three sections of the Act can be taken in the written statement when a suit is filed.

With great respect I am unable to agree with the view that in respect of loans contracted after the Act comes into force it is open to the debtor to make his application for reducing interest either when a decree is going to be passed or at any time after the decree whenever it is sought to be enforced against him. That question did not really arise for decision, but I should myself be much inclined to doubt whether a defendant who has not taken a plea under ss. 28, 29 and 31 of the Act could be allowed at the time of execution of the decree to apply for amendment of the decree, there being no provision for any such application in the Agri. Relief Act while neither s. 152 nor s. 47 of the Civil P. C., would cover such an application.

Section 30 was evidently framed to meet the case of loans taken before the passing of the Act and such loans would necessarily be of two kinds, that is loans as yet undecreed and loans decreed already. For the case of loans as yet undecreed at that date s. 30 (1) was, I think, inserted to enable the defendant to get the benefit of the reduced rates of interest prescribed in Sch. III for the period from January 1, 1930. Similarly s. 30 (2) appears to me to have been framed to meet the case of loans in respect of which a decree had already been passed at, that is before, the same date.

As learned Counsel for the decree-holder opposite party has contended, the word "already" must be treated as having some real significance, and I am unable to take the view that there is anything contrary to the spirit of this Act in accepting the view that the point of time referred to by the use of the word "already" is the date at which the Act came into force. This interpretation appears to me to be consistent with the view I take that cls. (1) and (2) of s. 30 are intended to cover the whole field of loans taken before the Act came into force, that is those in which a decree has already been passed and those in which a decree has not already been passed. I am further impressed with the view that it could not have been the intention of the legislature by enacting s. 30 (2) to override the ordinary provisions of the law of res judicata. The proper time for a debtor to plead that he is entitled to the advantage of the Agri. Relief Act and specifically to a reduction of interest is when a suit is instituted against him and when the question whether he was or was not an agriculturist at the date of the loan can be properly gone into, and I do not in any case think that he should be allowed a second opportunity of litigating a matter which should have been litigated by him at the first opportunity.

In my opinion, while I am reluctant to put a different interpretation on any clauses of the Agri. Relief Act from that which has found favour with the High Court at Allahabad, the answer to the question referred to us for decision is that the words "if a decree has already been passed" in cl. (2) of s. 30 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act refer only to decrees passed before that Act came into force.

Radha Krishna, J.—(April, 3, 1940).—I had already expressed my own view on the question in the order of reference. After hearing the arguments before the Full Bench I still adhere to that view. I agree with the answer proposed to be given by my learned brother Mr. Justice Yorke.

Hamilton, J.—I agree.

By the Court.—The answer to the reference is that the words "if a decree has already been passed" in cl. (2) of s. 30 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act refer only to decrees passed before that Act came into force.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Agreement to refer case of minor to arbitration—Leave of Court, if necessary.

Every agreement by the guardian or next friend of a minor relating to a suit is subject to the leave of the Court. Agreement to refer to arbitration is an agreement within the meaning of r. 7 of O. XXXII, Civil P. C., and the leave of the Court should be taken when the case of a minor is being referred to arbitration.

C. R. from an order of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, Nowshera, dated March 20, 1939.

Mr. Sher Khan, for the Petitioners.
Lala Deviditta Mal Kakar, for the Respondents.

Order.—The respondents were plaintiffs in the trial Court. They had sued the petitioners (who were defendants) for possession of 8 mls, 3 gs. of land. The parties referred the dispute to the arbitration of one Mira Khan. Mira Khan said that the plaintiffs should get a decree for 8 mls. of land against the defendants. The trial Judge accepted the award and passed a decree accordingly. The defendants have come up on revision to this Court. The first objection taken by the learned Counsel for the petitioners is that Said Rahman, petitioner, was a minor and that the reference to arbitration was made by his guardian without getting the leave of the Court as is required by O. XXXIII, r. 7, Civil P. C. The learned Counsel for the respondents meets this objection by saying that the permission was not necessary. The rule runs thus:

(1) No next friend or guardian for the suit shall without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian. (2) Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor."

It is quite clear that every agreement by the guardian or next friend of a minor relating to a suit is subject to the leave of the Court. Agreement to refer to arbitration is an agreement within the meaning of this Rule and there is no reason why the leave of the Court should not be taken when the case of a minor is being referred to arbitration. All the High Courts except those of Allahabad and Calcutta are unanimous that leave is necessary for referring the case of a minor to arbitration. I agree with the majority of the Courts and hold accordingly. The Rule lays down that the permission should be expressly recorded. There is no question therefore of presuming that the Court impliedly granted the leave when accepting the reference to arbitration. It is a very material defect which goes to the root of the case and makes the reference invalid. I therefore accept the petition, set aside the order of the Court below and supersede the reference to arbitration. I direct that the case shall go back to the original Court for trial on merits. Costs to follow the event.

Hindu Law — Debts — Son's liability — Father defending suit on behalf of minor daughter and setting up false will — Father ordered to pay costs personally on that account — Liability of sons for such debt.

Where the Court orders the father to pay personally the plaintiff's costs in a suit in which the father defends his minor daughter, for setting up a false will, although the father is not party to the suit, such a debt must be said to be a debt tainted with illegality or immorality for which his sons cannot be held liable. The costs of the appeal must be dealt with in the same way as the costs of the suit, if in prosecuting the appeal the father is acting in the same illegal and immoral way.

Burn, J.—These are cross-appeals from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry passed on E. A. No. 626 of 1935 in O. S. No. 68 of 1919. The decree-holders in this execution petition sought to recover from the judgment-debtors four sums of money: costs in O. S. No. 68 of 1919 ordered by the decree of the Court to be paid by the guardian of defendant No. 1 to plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 amounting to Rs. 606-8-0, interest on the same sum from October 16, 1923 to September 15, 1935 at 6 per cent, per annum amounting to Rs. 476-8-9, the costs decreed in A. S. No. 134 of 1924 on the file of this High Court amounting to Rs. 465-1-6 and costs in C. M. P. No. 2774 of 1927 on the file of this High Court amounting to Rs. 402-13-0. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the legal representatives of judgment-debtor No. 1 Vedula Ramakrishnamma should be added in the execution petition and that execution should proceed against any self-acquired properties of judgment-debtor No. 1 in their hands for the recovery of the first two items namely, Rs. 666-8-0, and interest Rs. 476-2-9. He directed that with regard to the remaining two sums all the joint family property of the respondents should be held liable. The judgment-debtors have appealed with regard to the last two items. Their contention is that the costs of the appeal (A. S. No. 134 of 1924) should have been dealt with in the same way as the cost of the suit and interest upon it and that in so far as the costs in the O. M. P. are concerned, only the estate of appellant No. 1 should be made liable. In O. M. A. No. 24 of 1938 the transferee decree-holders have appealed contending that the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor No. 1 should also be held liable for the costs of the suit and the interest Items Nos. 1 and 2 referred to above.

Dealing with appeal No. 24 of 1938 first, we think the contention raised on behalf of these appellants is quite untenable. It was shown that Vedula Ramakrishnamma in defending O. S. No. 68 of 1919 on behalf of his minor daughter Nittala Yellamma set up a false will. It was for that reason that the Court ordered him personally to pay the costs of the plaintiff's although he himself was not a party to the suit. We think that it is quite clear that this debt is properly described as avyavaharika. As the learned Subordinate Judge has said, although he might have felt responsible for defending the suit on behalf of his minor daughter, he was certainly under no obligation to fabricate a will in order to do so and all the costs that he incurred in prosecuting a defence of this kind must be said to be a debt tainted with illegality or immorality for which his sons cannot be held liable.

With regard to the costs of the appeal we agree with the learned Counsel for the appellants in O. M. A. No. 416 of 1937 that they must be dealt with in the same way as the costs of the suit. It was urged on behalf of the respondents (decree-holders) that whatever might be said about the costs of the suit, the costs incurred by Vedula Ramakrishnamma in prosecuting the appeal could not be said to be a debt tainted with illegality or immorality. We find however on referring to the grounds of appeal (the appeal was preferred jointly by Vedula Ramakrishnamma as defendant No. 2 and his daughter as defendant No. 1) that the allegations made are that the lower Court was wrong in its decision that the will was a fabrication. It is quite clear therefore in prosecuting the appeal Vedula Ramakrishnamma was acting in the same illegal and immoral way as he had done in conducting the defence on behalf of his minor daughter. There was no separate ground taken in A. S. No. 134 of 1924 that the order of the trial Court directing the guardian to pay the costs was in itself illegal.

With regard to Item No. 4 appellant No. 1 in O. M. A. No. 416 of 1937 was the only person interested in O. M. P. No. 2774 of 1927. That petition was filed on his behalf by his father to bring him on record as the legal representative of his sister, appellant No. 1, in A. S. No. 134 of 1924. The order of the Court was that the petition be dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 and 3. The liability for this falls, as the learned Subordinate Judge has said, upon the estate of the minor Nittala Lakshminarasimhamurti but his brothers are in no way concerned in that and the joint family property in their hands cannot be made liable for this item. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have overlooked this point when he made all the joint family property liable for the costs decreed in O. M. P. No. 2774 of 1927. The result therefore is that O. M. A. No. 416 of 1937 is allowed with costs throughout and that O. M. A. No. 24 of 1928 is dismissed with costs.

[Note:—It should be made clear in the decree that the item of Rs. 465-1-6 (costs in the appeal) will be recoverable from any self-acquired properties of Vedula Ramakrishnamma in the hands of any of the judgment-debtors.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 233, 225, 537—Charge under s. 420, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), covering many cases of cheating—Defect, if curable, when no prejudice is caused—Prosecution under s. 420, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Misrepresentation, proof of—Exact words used by accused should be given.

Lumping of various cases of cheating in a charge under s. 420, I. P. O., should be avoided. But where by such a defect no prejudice is caused to the accused, and there is no miscarriage of justice, the defect is curable under ss. 225 and 537, Criminal P. O. 174 Ind. Cas. 1 (1), relied on.

In a prosecution under s. 420 if misrepresentation has to be proved, it would be better to get the exact words used by the accused.

Or. R. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Darbhanga, dated January 16, 1940.

Messrs. M. Yunis and M. Azizullah, for the Petitioner.

Varma, J.—The petitioner Chaudhuri Chandra Narain Jha was convicted on three counts by a Magistrate of Darbhanga and sentenced under each of those counts as follows: In Case No. 397 of 1939 for having attempted to cheat Sonelal Gupta he has been awarded a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 150 in default three months' rigorous imprisonment; in Case No. 428 of 1939, which is in connection with the cheating of Ramdhani Mahto Pasi, he has been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 150 in default three months' rigorous imprisonment; and in Case No. 429 of 1939, which is connected with Misri Sahni, he has been given the same sentence as in Case No. 428 of 1939. The sentences of imprisonment are to run concurrently, with the result that he has got a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 450 in all. The original sentences of fine were more, but it is the modified sentences on appeal, that I have mentioned just now.

The case for the prosecution is that on May 25, 1939, Inspector Rajbali Thakur on receipt of some information from a spy that gold mohurs were being faked with the object of creating public arranged to have a test purchase. He gave the spy Rs. 20 and received a faked gold mohur, which is an exhibit in this case. On receiving some further information on June 5, 1939, he deputed the senior Town Sub-Inspector to search the house of one Kambilas Mahto who is an electroplater. Sonelal Gupta, who was the victim in Case No. 397 of 1939, was deputed to act as a decoy. Sonelal Gupta went with the spy with a marked ten-rupee note. He came and gave certain information to the Police Office. The Police went to a sweetmeat shop known as the Prabhas Cabin and surrounded the shop. The petitioner who was there was searched and the marked note, four faked gold mohurs and one silver coin which, if electroplated with gold, would have looked like a gold mohur were recovered from him. On his own statement the Inspector drew up a First Information Report. The house of Ramdas was then searched and certain articles connected with electroplating were recovered. Now, these searches had the effect of rousing the curiosity of at least two other persons who had dealt with the petitioner. One was Ramdhani Pasi who had purchased a gold mohur from the petitioner, and the other was Misri Sahni. Ramdhani Pasi on hearing of these searches got the gold mohur, which he had purchased from the petitioner, tested by one goldsmith, Sitarama Sonar, and found that the gold mohur was faked. He went and lodged an information before the Police, and in his own information he mentioned the name of Misri Sahni, and the latter also made a statement and produced the gold mohur which was found to be faked. Later on in the course of the investigation a test identification was held, and on June 21, 1939, in that test identification Ramdhani and Misri both picked out the present petitioner. After conviction the petitioner went in appeal. The lower Appellate Court modified the conviction connected with the case of Sonelal Gupta from under s. 420 to one under ss. 420/511, I. P. O., and as I have just now said, he reduced the sentence of fine. The petitioner has now come in revision before us.

Mr. Yunus appearing on behalf of the petitioner, has urged that the charge framed in this case is improper and it offends against the provisions of s. 233, Criminal P. O. This point was urged before the lower Appellate Court. In order to appreciate this point I would quote the charge which runs as follows.

"I, Muhammad Usman, Magistrate, First Class hereby charge you Chowdhury Chandra Narain Jha alias Kandhaiyaji as follows:—

"That you on or about May 9, and June 5, 1939, at Mahalla Mullaganj and Laheria Sarai cheated Ramdhani Manton Pasi, Misri Sahni and Sonelal Gupta (p. ws.) by dishonestly inducing them to deliver cash Rs. 50 to you on account of the price of two faked gold mohurs passed as genuine and also on account of advance for 4 similar gold mohurs. The said Rs. 50 was the property of the said three witnesses, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 420 of the I. P. O., and within my cognizance."

Looking at this charge, it is clear that the three cases of cheating have been lumped together in one charge. Even the sum of money advanced by the victims of the offences of cheating have been lumped together, although it was Rs. 20 in the case of Ramdhani, Rs. 20 in the case of Misri and Rs. 10 in the case of Sonelal. The question is whether the irregularity in the charge has prejudiced the petitioner before us. The law on this point has been clearly laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emperor (1). There were two appellants in that case and they were charged with offences under the Electricity Act. The first appellant, Babulal Choukhani, was convicted of theft of electricity. His conviction by the Magistrate for conspiracy was quashed on appeal by the High Court. The second appellant was convicted of aiding and abetting the first appellant, the conviction given against him for conspiracy being likewise quashed. The charges framed against both the appellants, jointly with the other accused were as follows :

"That you between January 1934, and January 20, 1935, at 2 and 2-1 Chittaranjan Avenue (Bharat Lakshmi Picture House), Jupiter Cinema, 66-2 Beadon Street, Sealdah Hotel, 225 Harrison Road and other places in Calcutta, Howrah and 24 Parganas, along with Krishna Chandra Shome, Bhola Nath Chatterji, Hardwar Singh, Aswini Kumar Panja, Nanilal Ghose alias Noni Mistri, Putu, Mohammad Abdul Azim and Bhudeb Chandra Seth, and others were parties to a criminal conspiracy to commit theft (dishonest consumption or user) of electric energy belonging to the Calcutta Electric Supply Corporation Limited by tampering with meters at the premises of the consumers and that in pursuance of the said conspiracy, theft of electric energy was in fact committed at Bharat Lakshmi Picture House, Jupiter Cinema and other places and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 120-B of the I. P. O., read with s. 39 of the Indian Electricity Act and s. 379 of the I. P. O., and within the cognizance of this Court."

The first appellant Babulal Choukhani alone was further charged as follows :

"That you between April 1934, and January 16, 1935, at Bharat Lakshmi Picture House, situate at 2 and 2-1 Chittaranjan Avenue, Police Station Jorasanko, Calcutta, committed theft (by dishonest consumption or user) of electric energy belonging to the Calcutta Electric Supply Corporation Limited and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 39 of the Indian Electricity Act (IX of 1910) read with s. 379 of the I. P. O., and within the cognizance of this Court."

The second appellant alone was further charged as follows :

"That you between April 1934 and January 16, 1935, at Bharat Lakshmi Picture House, abetted Babulal Choukhani in the commission of the offence of theft (by dishonest consumption or user) of electric energy belonging to the Calcutta Electric Supply Corporation Ltd., which offence was committed in consequence of your abetment and you have thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 109 of the I. P. O., read with s. 39 of the Indian Electricity Act (IX of 1910) and s. 379 of the I. P. O., and within the cognizance of this Court."

The first point raised before their Lordships was in connection with s. 239 (d) of the Criminal P. O., but we are not concerned in this case with that provision of law. It was contended in that case that the charge of theft was not properly framed, because the charge as framed alleged a multiplicity of offence between April 1934 and January 1935 whereas the offence did not constitute a single continuing offence; they were separate offences committed on particular dates and should have been separately charged. The Judicial Committee observed as follows :

"Their Lordships feel that the form of the charge was most irregular and regrettable and one which should be avoided. But they cannot regard this objection as one which in the circumstances of this case should receive effect, especially because they agree with the High Court that no injustice was inflicted on the appellants. The specific offences of which they were accused were satisfactorily proved by competent evidence, corroborated in all necessary respects. There was no miscarriage of justice. In addition the irregularity was such as could be, and was cured under ss. 225 and 537 by the finding that the accused had not been prejudiced."

In the case before us the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the case continued for a length of time and the witnesses were cross examined elaborately on behalf of the accused, and, although the form of the charge was such as should be avoided, no prejudice was caused to the petitioner. I agree with the finding of the learned Judge that the petitioner has not been prejudiced by the defect in the charge.

The second point urged by Mr. Yunus is that attempting to cheat Sonelal has not been made out, because there was no case of representation on the part of the petitioner which would bring the offence under s. 420. The learned Judge in the Court below has himself noticed that the first information in respect of that occurrence does not specify that the petitioner made any false representation to Sonelal to induce him to believe that the gold mohurs were genuine. No doubt towards the end of his examination-in-chief Sonelal said that the accused made him believe that the gold mohurs (Exs. III to VI) were genuine and nothing was wrong with them ; but his evidence on this point falls short of the mark. If misrepresentation had to be proved, it would have been better to get the exact words used by the petitioner, and it must also be remembered that Sonelal himself was being used as a decoy by the Police. The benefit of the discrepancies in the evidence of Sonelal must be given to the accused. I would, therefore, give the petitioner benefit of the doubt with regard to this charge and set aside his conviction and the sentence passed on him under s. 420/511 I. P. O.

So far as the conviction under s. 420, I. P. O., connected with the other two prosecution witnesses, Ramdhani Pasi and Misri Sahni, is concerned, they are poor people and they came to inform the Police on hearing of the searches carried on in the shop and of the person of the present petitioner. Their evidence has been accepted by both the Courts below. There is no reason to discard their evidence now. I would, therefore, uphold the conviction of the petitioner for cheating these two witnesses as well as his sentences passed in Case Nos. 428 and 429 of 1939.

There is one other point which was raised by Mr. Yunus and that was that evidence, which was clearly inadmissible, has been brought upon the record. Firstly, that the statements made by the spy, who was not examined, have been brought on the record through the Inspector; and secondly, certain statements by P. W. No. 16 were made in his cross-examination with regard to the statements made by him before the Sub-Inspector. The learned Judge has held that these statements were inadmissible, and he has based his conclusions on evidence other than these statements.

A special plea was raised on the question of sentence by Mr. Yunus on the ground that the petitioner comes of a respectable family and he is a young man of 18 years. Looking at the nature of the offence, it is only a person of some substance who can pass a fake mohur for a genuine one. No one would easily purchase even a genuine mohur from a poor man. The offence is a serious one and I see no reason to interfere with the sentences connected with the cheating of Ramdhani Pasi and Misri Sahni.

In the result the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 150 for having attempted to cheat Sonelal Gupta will be set aside; but the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 150 in default three months' rigorous imprisonment in each of the two Cases Nos. 428 and 429 of 1939, relating to the offences of cheating Ramdhani Pasi and Misri Sahni will stand, the sentences to run concurrently.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 1690 of 1938

March 20, 1939

BHIDE, J.

NAND LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Mst. LAKHMI AND OTHERS—DEPENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS

Res judicata—Plaintiff abandoning claim — There is no decision operating as res judicata — Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 68, 49 — Deed of adoption or gift requires no attestation in Punjab — Operation of s. 68 is precluded—Certified copy of registered deed produced—Person challenging deed not denying that it is copy of deed—Attesting witnesses, if must be produced—Document making gift of piece of land and relinquishment of reversionary rights, not registered —Whether admissible for collateral purpose of proving relinquishment—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Document giving up reversionary rights, if must be registered.

When the plaintiffs abandon their claim, there is no trial of the issues arising between the parties and consequently there is no decision which could operate as res judicata. To prevent the defendants being harassed unnecessarily a second time on the same cause of action, the law however prescribes that the plaintiffs shall not sue again on the same cause of action, unless the suit is withdrawn under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. O., owing to some technical defect, etc., and the permission of the Court is obtained. 110 Ind. Cas. 818 (2), relied on. Watson v. Collector of Lilla Rajshahye (1), distinguished.

There is no law in force in the Punjab requiring a deed of adoption or gift to be attested by witnesses and this by itself would preclude the operation of s. 68, Evi. Act.

Where, when a certified copy of a registered deed of gift is produced, a party challenging the deed does not specifically deny that it is the copy of the deed, in such a case under Proviso to s. 68, Evi. Act, the production of an attesting witness is not essential.

Where an unregistered document executed by a reversioner contains relinquishment of reversionary right and also an agreement to make a gift of a piece of land to the donee even if the document requires registration so far as the gift is concerned it can be admitted in evidence for the collateral purpose of proving the relinquishment of reversionary rights under s. 49, Evi. Act.

The transfer of reversionary rights is not itself tantamount to transfer of property and hence registration of a document giving up reversionary rights is not necessary. 88 Ind. Cas. 550 (3), relied on.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated August 15, 1938.

Messrs. Harnam Singh and B. H. Ali, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The following pedigree table will show the relationship of the parties concerned in this case:

The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by Nand Lal for a declaration that a gift of property made by Mst. Lakhmi, defendant No. 1, in favour of Parshotam Das, defendant No. 2, shall not affect his reversionary right. The suit was resisted by the defendants mainly on the ground that Nand Lal had been adopted by one Hira Singh and had, therefore, lost his right to inherit the property in dispute. It appears that in the year 1924 on the death of Duni Chand, father of the plaintiff, when his property was mutated in favour of Nand Lal, Tola Ram and Mst. Lakhmi instituted a suit to contest the succession on the ground that Nand Lal had been adopted by Hira Singh and could not therefore inherit the property of his father. Eventually, however, they abandoned the suit and it was dismissed. The defendants' allegation was that the withdrawal of the suit was due to a compromise effected between the parties by virtue of which one ghumaon of land was given by the plaintiff Nand Lal to Tola Ram and Tola Ram and Mst. Lakhmi abandoned their claim. The trial Court dismissed the suit and the decision has been upheld by the learned District Judge on appeal. On behalf of the plaintiff who has come in second appeal the following points have been argued: (1) The withdrawal of the suit by Mst. Lakhmi and Tola Ram in the year 1931 was tantamount to a dismissal of their claim and consequently the issue as to adoption which arose in that case must be held to have been decided against them and to operate as res judicata. (2) The execution of the deed of adoption on which the defendants relied and of which a certified copy was produced by them has not been duly proved. (3) That the agreement on which the defendants relied required registration and was inadmissible in evidence.

As regards the first point, it appears from the record of the previous case that issues were framed including one on the question of adoption, but thereafter both the plaintiffs abandoned their claim, stating that they had been persuaded to do so by respectable members of their brotherhood. As a result the suit was dismissed but the parties were left to bear their costs as desired by the plaintiffs. The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that as the plaintiffs led no evidence and the suit was dismissed the issue as to adoption must be deemed to have been decided against them and must operate as res judicata. In support of this contention, the learned Counsel has relied on Watson v. Collector of Lilla Rajshahye (1). But that case is distinguishable as the plaintiffs in that case do not appear to have abandoned the claim as in the present suit. When the plaintiffs abandon their claim, there is no trial of the issues arising between the parties and consequently there is no decision which could operate as res judicata: cf. Rama Mal v. Upendra Dutt (2). To prevent the defendants being harassed unnecessarily a second time on the same cause of action, the law however prescribes that the plaintiffs shall not sue again on the same cause of action, unless the suit is withdrawn owing to some technical defect, etc., and the permission of the Court is obtained (O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C.). The learned Counsel for the appellant next argued that the case did not fall within the purview of O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C., as the defendants were not awarded costs. But the wording of that Rule shows that costs are in the discretion of the Court and when the plaintiffs had not gone to trial on the issues and the defendant raised no objection, the Court may have thought it proper to leave the parties to bear their costs. I accordingly hold that there was no decision in the previous suit on the question of adoption, whether express or implied, which could operate as res judicata against the defendants in this case.

As regards the second point, the plaintiff admitted that there was a gift by Hira Singh in his favour, but denied that there was any adoption. He did not produce the original deed alleging that it had been lost and the defendants had therefore to produce a certified copy of the deed as secondary evidence. The learned Counsel for the appellant urged that the production of the secondary evidence did not absolve the defendants from producing evidence as regards the execution of the deed as required by s. 68, Evi. Act, and as no attesting witness was produced the execution of the deed must be held to have been not proved. This contention also does not appear to me to have any force. In the first place there appears to be no law in force in this province requiring a deed of adoption (or gift?) to be attested by witnesses and this by itself would preclude the operation of s. 68. Moreover, the deed was registered and when a certified copy was produced, the plaintiff did not specifically deny that it was the copy of the deed of gift which according to him was executed by Hira Singh in his favour. It would appear from the proviso to s. 68 that in the circumstances the production of an attesting witness was not essential. The plaintiff had described himself as an adopted son of Hira Singh at the time when the land of Hira Singh was mutated in his favour on the alleged deed of gift. If that deed was different, the plaintiff might have been expected to produce at any rate a copy thereof to support his case; but he has not done so. In view of all these circumstances I agree with the learned District Judge that the execution of this document was sufficiently proved.

The third point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant was that the agreement dated March 10, 1931, which was relied on by the defendants and by which the plaintiff is said to have given up his reversionary rights in the property left by the husband of Mst. Lakhmi, required registration. It was urged that the transfer of reversionary rights was itself tantamount to transfer of property and hence registration was necessary. But this contention seems to be clearly untenable in view of the Division Bench ruling of this Court reported in Gurbhaji v. Lachhman (3). The learned Counsel next urged that the agreement included a gift of one ghumaon to Tola Ram and hence it required registration as a deed of gift at any rate. But there is no dispute in the present case as regards the gift of one ghumaon to Tola Ram. The agreement is relied on only to prove the relinquishment of the reversionary rights. Consequently even if the document required registration so far as the gift was concerned, the document can be admitted in evidence for the collateral purpose of proving the relinquishment of reversionary rights: cf. s. 49, Evi. Act. In my opinion the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Application in Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction Suit No. 12 of 1934

BLACKWELL, J.

BHAGWANDAS NARANDAS—

D. D. PATEL & Co.—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476 (as amended in 1923)—Stranger to proceedings in which offence is committed can apply under s. 476—Application under, when should be made—Applicant, if entitled to adduce evidence outside record of proceedings out of which application arises, to show that evidence, in those proceedings was false—Proceedings under—Costs, if can be awarded—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 44, 41—Whether applies to civil and criminal proceedings—Judgment in probable suit is judgment in rem—Stranger's right to impeach decree in rem—Party against whom judgment is set up, if should bring separate suit—Probate decree—Application under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code—Criminal Court's jurisdiction to decide that probate decree was forgery—Applicability of s. 44 to application under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

Section 476, Criminal P. C., as amended, contains words which were not present in the former section, namely "whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise." Therefore it is open to the Court to entertain an application under s. 476 at the instance of a stranger to the proceedings out of which the application arises and in the course of which the offence is alleged to have been committed. 120 Ind. Cas. 629 (2), relied on.

Under s. 476 as it now stands the application need not be made in the course of the proceedings out of which it arises, or immediately thereafter. Whether the Court would accede to an application made long after the termination of the proceedings out of which it arises is a matter which would arise upon the merits and would no doubt depend upon all the circumstances. Begu Singh v. Emperor (3) held overruled by 88 Ind. Cas. 709 (1) and 6 Ind. Cas. 801 (6), relied on. Aujakannu Pillai v. Emperor (4) and In re Lakshmidas Lalji (5), dissented from. [p. 870, col. 1.]

In deciding whether it is in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made the Court is not confined to the record of the proceedings, but is entitled to take into account and consider information otherwise acquired. The applicant is entitled to adduce evidence outside the record of the proceedings out of which the application arises to show that evidence given in those proceedings was false.

In re Lakshmidas Lalji (5), relied on. 140 Ind. Cas. 619 (7), explained.

Proceedings under s. 476 being of civil nature Court would have jurisdiction to award costs. 114 Ind. Cas. 741 (24), followed.

Section 44, Evi. Act enables any party to a suit or other proceeding to show that a decree proved by the adverse party against him was obtained by fraud. The section would, apply in any proceedings, civil or criminal, if the decree sought to be challenged is proved by the adverse party. It cannot be said that it applies only in a suit for revocation of a probate.

A judgment in a probate suit is a judgment in rem.

By reason of s. 44, Evi. Act, the law in India is different from that in England, and in India the argument that a decree in rem even of a foreign Court cannot be contested at all, or can be contested only by the parties to the suit in which it was pronounced, cannot be accepted, and further in India a decree in rem which is relevant under s. 41, can be contested on the ground of fraud or collusion which does not go to the jurisdiction of the Court. Apart from s. 44, a stranger to a suit in which a decree in rem has been passed may impeach that decree for fraud and have it set aside if the fraud be proved. It is not necessary for the party against whom a judgment is set up to bring a separate suit to have it set aside, but he may show in the suit or proceeding in which it is set up against him that it was obtained by fraud. Bater v. Bater (12), not approved.

Where in the testamentary suit in which probate decree was passed, a stranger makes an application under s. 476, Criminal P. O., the proceedings under s. 476 must be regarded as independent, and when the applicant in the affidavit upon which the application is based admits the decree and there is no question of the decree being proved against him by the adverse party, s. 44, Evi. Act does not apply to this application. Although the Criminal Courts have no jurisdiction to revoke the probate it has full jurisdiction to decide that it was a forgery in a criminal case in which the party offering the evidence of forgery admits the probate to be valid and admits the title of the executor, but seeks to show what means he used in order to become so. Having regard to s. 44, Evi. Act, it would be equally open to the party offering the evidence of forgery to prove that the probate decree was obtained by fraud, if it were set up against him by the accused, instead of admitting the probate and the title of the executor. In the case of an application under s. 476, although s. 44, Evi. Act, does not apply, evidence of forgery is admissible in the same manner as it would be admissible in a criminal case, the applicant admitting the validity of the probate decree and the title of the executors. Buttery's Case (20) and Priestman v. Thomas (22), relied on. Rez v. Vincent (21), held no longer good law. Manjanali Debi v. Empress (18), dissented from.

Facts.—In or about the year 1923 Rasiklal Chandulal, the son of Chandulal Narandas, inherited a large estate from his mother. Rasiklal Chandulal died at Patan on April 17, 1934, being still a minor. On his death, his father Chandulal Narandas became entitled to inherit his estate. On August 25, 1925, E. D. Sassoon, United Mills Ltd., and D. D. Patel & Co., obtained a decree against the firm of Rasiklal Chandulal, of which Chandulal Narandas was the sole proprietor, for Rs. 2,10,916-11-0 and Rs. 200 for costs. On the death of Rasiklal Chandulal, the decree-holders D. D. Patel & Co., attached the securities and shares belonging to the deceased. Chandulal Narandas then alleged that there had been a settlement in respect of the decree. Realizing that he was unable to establish a settlement, he set about devising a scheme whereby his judgment-creditors might be prevented from having recourse to the estate which he had inherited from his son. Accordingly in conspiracy with Kalidas Gopaldas, Ratilal Ambalal, Kanubhai Keshavji, Ramanlal Mohanlal, Krishnalal Himatlal, Manilal Hargovandas, Manilal Gopaldas, Laloo Kuber, and in particular with his brother Bhagwandas Narandas, who was appointed one of the executors under the will, he procured the preparation and execution at Patan of a false will of the deceased Rasiklal dated April 11, 1934. A petition for probate of the will having been filed by Bhagwandas Narandas, D. D. Patel & Co., filed a caveat alleging that the will was a forgery. At the instance of Bhagwandas Narandas a commission was issued to Baroda, and from the evidence taken it became evident that the witnesses who were alleged to have executed the will were persons of no substance and were unreliable. Meantime photographs of the alleged signature of the deceased upon the will and of genuine signatures of the deceased were at the instance of the caveators submitted to hand-writing experts, and they expressed the opinion that the signature on the will was a forgery. Knowing that that signature was a forgery, and realizing that he would not be able to prove it to be genuine, Bhagwandas Narandas put pressure upon Chandulal Narandas to have the proceedings compromised in order that the forgery might not be established. Consequently on February 14, 1936 a consent decree was taken whereby probate was to issue to the plaintiff, and half the estate of the deceased was to go to the attaching creditors and the other half to the minor brothers of the deceased and the legatees who agreed to take half the amount mentioned in the will.

The conspiracy and the offences alleged were sought to be established by the evidence recorded on the commission, by other materials in the possession of the Police of Bombay, and by the matters alleged in a complaint filed by P. D. Patel, partner of D. D. Patel & Co., on August 3, 1934 in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate against Kalidas Gopaldas and others. It was one of the terms of the consent decree that the caveators should withdraw the criminal complaint, and they did so. Thus, Bhagwandas Narandas, Dhandulal Narandas and the other persons who were instrumental in the preparation and execution of the forged will were alleged to have succeeded in stifling the enquiries which had been started by the Police, and procured the admission to probate of a will which they knew to be forged. (An application was made under s. 476, Criminal P. O., for filing a complaint against Bhagwandas Narandas under ss. 191, 196, 467, 108 and 120-B, I. P. O.)

Mr. N. H. Bhagwati, for the Applicant.

Messrs. K. A. Somjee, Sir Jamshedji Kanga and M. M. Desai, to show cause.

Blackwell, J.—(After setting out facts, the judgment proceeded.) Section 476 (1), Criminal P. O., is as follows:

"When any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) or cl. (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the First Class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate or if the alleged offence is non-bailable may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate, and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate."

Provided that, where the Court making the complaint is a High Court, the complaint may be signed by such officer of the Court as the Court may appoint.

For the purposes of this sub-section, a Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the First Class."

The former s. 476 was amended by s. 128, Criminal P. O., (Amendment) Act, 1923. Several decisions based upon the former section have been cited to me, but, as was pointed out by Crump, J., in Bai Kasturbai v. Vanmalidas (1) the effect of them is very materially affected by the amendment. Mr. Somjee, for the respondent, took a preliminary objection to my entertaining the application based upon a number of grounds. First he submitted that a stranger to the testamentary proceedings out of which the application arises could not make the application. Section 476, as amended, contains words which were not present in the former section, namely "whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise." I think therefore that it is open to the Court to entertain an application under s. 476 at the instance of a stranger to the proceedings out of which the application arises. It was held in Harekrishna Parida v. Emperor (2) that the Court may be moved by a person who was not a party to the proceedings out of which the application arises. I respectfully agree with that decision. This point fails.

Next it was contended that the application can be made only in the course of the proceedings out of which the application arises, or immediately after the conclusion of those proceedings. Mr. Somjee relied upon decisions to this effect in Begu Singh v. Emperor (3) and Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (4). A different opinion was expressed in In re Lakshmidas Lalji (5) and by Miller, J., in his dissenting judgment in Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (4) and Begu Singh v. Emperor (3) must be taken to have been overruled by Bahadur v. Eradatullah Mallick (6). In Bai Kasturbai v. Vanmalidas (1) Crump, J. considered Begu Singh v. Emperor (3) and after pointing out that it was overruled by Bahadur v. Eradatullah Mallick (6) he said (p. 714*):

"It is also obvious from a reference to the section itself as it stood, and as it now stands, that the main grounds on which the decision rests are no longer in force. The learned Judges relied on the words "committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding" which are no longer to be found in the section;"

and he pointed to other amendments in the section which affected the grounds of the decision. As regards the former section I prefer the opinion expressed by the Judges in In re Lakshmidas Lalji (5) and by Miller, J., in his dissenting judgment in Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (4). On the section as it now stands it is, I think, clear that the application need not be made in the course of the proceedings out of which it arises, or immediately thereafter, and the difference of opinion upon the former section is now immaterial. Whether the Court would accede to an application made long after the termination of the proceedings out of which it arises is a matter which would arise upon the merits and would no doubt depend upon all the circumstances.

Then it was contended that the applicant is not entitled to adduce evidence outside the record of the proceedings out of which the application arises to show that evidence given in those proceedings was false. In support of this contention certain observations of the Judges in: In re Chatur Jethaji (7) were relied upon. They did not however say that the Court could look only to the record of the proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining whether the evidence was false. This was certainly not the opinion of the Judges in reference to the former section in: In re Lakshmidas Lalji (5). In that case Chandavarkar, J. said (p. 191*):

"An offence may be committed in the course of a trial before a Judge, and no one may know anything about it. It may be discovered long after the trial has ended; the Judge or his successor may come to know of it in the course of some other trial or in some other way. No private party may think it worth his while then to apply for a sanction to prosecute; and yet in the interests of public justice it may become necessary that there should be a prosecution."

These observations, in my opinion, apply with even greater force to the present section, which contains the words which were not present in the former section "whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise." In my view in deciding whether it is in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made the Court is not confined to the record of the proceedings, but is entitled to take into account and consider information otherwise acquired. Next it was contended that the judgment in the testamentary proceedings was a judgment in rem, which conclusively established the validity of the will and the title of the executors, and that no evidence could be adduced to show that the will was a forgery, except in a suit for revocation of the probate, and ss. 4 and 41, Evi. Act, and s. 273, Succession Act, were relied upon. As regards s. 44, Evi. Act, which provides that any party to a suit or other proceeding may show that any judgment, order, or decree, which is relevant under ss. 40, 41 or 42, and which has been proved by the adverse party, was obtained by fraud, it was contended that s. 44 would apply only in a suit for revocation, and in the alternative that it does not apply to this application in which the judgment is admitted by the applicant in para. 19 of his affidavit, s. 44 being applicable only when the judgment has been proved by the adverse party. The contention that s. 44 would apply only in a suit for revocation is in my opinion ill founded. The section contains no limitation of the character suggested; it enables any party to a suit or other proceeding to show that a decree proved by the adverse party against him was obtained by fraud. The section would, in my opinion, apply in any proceeding, civil or criminal, if the decree sought to be challenged is proved by the adverse party.

No authority is needed for the proposition that judgment in a probate suit is a judgment in rem. Of the cases cited upon this point, I may mention Komollochun Dutt v. Nilrutton Mundle (8), Venkatasubamma v. Ramayya (9), Harmasji Navroji v. Bal Dhanbaiji Jamsetji Dosabhai (10) and Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Sakwarbai (11). Mr. Somjee referred to Bater v. Bater (12), but it was pointed out by Macpherson, J., in Sita Devi v. Gopal Saran (13), that by reason of s. 44, Evi. Act, the law in India is different from that in England, and that in India the argument that a decree in rem even of a foreign Court cannot be contested at all, or can be contested only by the parties to the suit in which it was pronounced, cannot be accepted, and further that in India a decree in rem which is relevant under s. 41, Evi. Act, can be contested on the ground of fraud or collusion which does not go to the jurisdiction of the Court. Apart from s. 44, Evi. Act, it is well established that a stranger to a suit in which a decree in rem has been passed may impeach that decree for fraud and have it set aside if the fraud be proved: see the judgment of Latham, J., in Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy v. Vullebhoy Cassambhoy (14), where the question is fully discussed. It is also clear that having regard to s. 44, Evi. Act, it is not necessary for the party against whom a judgment is set up to bring a separate suit to have it set aside, but that he may show in the suit or proceeding in which it is set up against him that it was obtained by fraud: see Bansi Lal v. Dhapo (15) and Rajib Panda v. Lakhan Sendh Mahapatra (16), in which the judgment of Banerjee, J., is very instructive. It has been urged that this is an application in the very suit in which the probate decree was obtained, and that s. 44 applies only where the decree is set up in a separate suit or proceeding, and Counsel referred to Biswa Nath Prosad v. Bhagwandin Pandey (17), where it was held that an execution proceeding is a continuation of the suit, and s. 44 does not apply. In my opinion, although instituted in the testamentary suit in which the decree was passed, this is an independent proceeding brought by a stranger to the suit, but I think that as the applicant in the affidavit upon which the application is based admits the decree and there is no question of the decree being proved against him by the adverse party, s. 44, does not apply to this application. Mr. Desai however for the applicant said that he did not upon this application seek to challenge the validity of the decree or the title of the executors, but that while admitting both he sought to show that in procuring the decree and his title as executor the respondent had been guilty of the offences set out in the schedule to the rule. He submitted that he was entitled to adduce evidence for this purpose. I will return to this argument later.

Mr. Somjee next submitted that no evidence would be admissible in a Criminal Court to establish the alleged offences so long as the probate of the will was unrevoked, and that if this be so, it would be futile for the Court to admit such evidence on this application even if it is admissible and the Court should decline to do so, and he relied upon Manjanali Debi v. Empress (18) and Kanullah v. Emperor (19). Section 44

Evi. Act, was not referred to in Manjanali Debi v. Emperor (18) and Buttery's Case (20), hereafter discussed, was not cited. With respect Manjanali Debi v. Emperor (18), was in my opinion wrongly decided. In Kanullah v. Emperor (19), the point decided was that the Criminal Court should have stayed its hand when the decree of the Munsif, upon which he had moved under s. 476, was reversed, as that order was no longer justified. Mr. Somjee also referred to the notes on s. 41 of Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, Edn. 9, at p. 419, where it is said that while in English Law a judgment in rem is strong prima facie evidence in a criminal case on behalf of the person in whose favour such judgment was given, yet "under this Act such a judgment will be conclusive in a criminal, equally and to the same extent as in a civil proceeding;" he referred also to Sarkar on Evidence, Edn., 5, p. 384, where it is said that "a judgment in rem under this section," (i. e., s. 41) "will be conclusive in a criminal as well as in a civil proceeding." The learned authors of these works do not, however, in these passages refer to s. 44. I see no ground for drawing any distinction between civil or criminal proceedings as to the applicability of s. 44, which permits "any party to a suit or other proceeding" to prove that a judgment proved by the adverse party was obtained by fraud. If therefore a criminal enquiry should be directed and a complaint made, I think that s. 44 would apply if the probate decree were relied upon by the accused.

In Buttery's Case (20), above mentioned, nine Judges considered the objection taken for the prisoners that the probate unrevoked was conclusive evidence of the validity of the will, and overruled it and held that the conviction for forging the will was right. The ruling to the contrary by King, C. J., in the earlier case in Rex v. Vincent (21), cannot now be treated as good law. Mr. Somjee objected that in the year 1818 when Buttery's Case (20), was decided, the probate affected personalty only and not realty, and that no regard should be paid in India to the ruling in that case where no distinction has ever been made as in England between real and personal estate. But in England since the passing of the Land Transfer Act of 1897 probate is conclusive as to both real and personal property, and the principle in Buttery's Case (20), is considered as good law in England today;

Thomas* (22), where Cotton, L. J., expressed the opinion that although the Chancery Division had no jurisdiction to revoke the probate of a will, it had full jurisdiction to decide that it was a forgery, and Archbold's Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice, Edn. 30, p. 818. The question is discussed in Vol. 2 of Smith's Leading Cases, and at p. 693 the learned authors say :

"In Buttery's Case (20) a probate was held not to be conclusive evidence that the party obtaining it had not forged the will, which may at first sight seem inconsistent with the doctrine in Noell v. Wells (23), at p. 236, viz., that the party in a civil action cannot avoid the probate by showing the will to be forged. But, on consideration, the cases appear to be consistent; for, in the civil suit, the evidence is offered for the purpose of showing that the party who obtained probate did not thereby become executor, which character the special Court has adjudged him to possess: but in the criminal case, the party offering the evidence admits the probate to be valid till repealed, admits the prisoner to have thereby become executor, but merely seeks to show what means he used in order to become so, which is no more than if he sought to prove that in the affidavit in which the prisoner verified the scripts he had committed perjury."

In my opinion, the principle in Buttery's Case (20), is applicable in India in a criminal case in which the party offering the evidence of forgery admits the probate to be valid till repealed, and admits the title of the executor, but seeks to show what means he used in order to become so. Having regard to s. 44, Evi. Act, I think that it would be equally open to the party offering the evidence of forgery to prove that the probate decree was obtained by fraud, if it were set up against him by the accused, instead of admitting the probate and the title of the executor. As regards the present application under s. 476, although s. 44, Evi. Act, does not apply, I think that evidence of forgery is admissible in the same manner as it would be admissible in a criminal case, the applicant admitting the validity of the probate decree and the title of the executors.

All the points taken by way of preliminary objection in my opinion fail. I therefore proceed to hear the application upon the merits. [His Lordship then proceeded to hear the application upon the merits, and dismissed it with costs, observing as follows]: Mr. Desai submits that I should make no order as to costs. He argues that s. 476 falls under Chap. XXXV, Criminal P. C., and that there is no provision made in any part of that Chapter for costs. He referred me to Emperor v. Behari Lal (24); and though in that case it was held on the particular facts that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to award costs, it was pointed out in the judgment that in proceedings under s. 476 the Court acts as a Civil Court, and that the Civil Court would have jurisdiction to award costs to one or the other party where the parties were the same as those in the civil litigation. I am clearly of opinion that an application under s. 476, being in the nature of a civil application the Court has full jurisdiction to award costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Civil Rule No. 591 of 1939

May 24, 1939

B. K. MUKHERJEE AND ROXBURGH, JJ.

MAHESH MISSIR AND OTHERS—

PETITIONERS

versus

PROVINCE OF BENGAL—OPPOSITE PARTY

Calcutta Improvement Act (V of 1911), s. 24—Any portion of land intended to be acquired in pursuance of contract under s. 21, if can be abandoned by Board of Trustees—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 49—Order of tribunal rejecting reference under s. 49 (1)—Appealability—Held, application of the tenants to acquire their huts also was not premature.

Even apart from s. 78, Land Acquisition Act, there is nothing in the Land Acquisition Act or the Cal. Improvement Act which prevents the acquiring authority from abandoning a portion of the land in respect of which proceedings under the Act have been taken. Under s. 24, Cal. Improvement Act, very comprehensive powers are given to the Board of Trustees and they can enter into and perform any contract which they might consider necessary for carrying out the purposes of the agreement. There is nothing in law therefore which prevents the Board from abandoning any portion of the land intended to be acquired in pursuance of a contract entered into under the provisions of s. 24, Cal. Improvement Act. Secretary of State v. Mahip Sha (3), relied on.

A decision on or a determination by the tribunal of any matter which has no reference to compensation in some form or other does not come under the definition of an 'award,' and no appeal lies in such cases. An order of the tribunal rejecting reference under s. 49; Land Acquisition Act is not therefore appealable. 50 Ind. Cas. 732 (1), relied on. 37 Ind. Ind. Cas. 11 (2), explained.

Held, on facts that the application of the tenants for the acquisition of their huts also was not premature. The action taken by way of agreement under s. 24, Cal. Improvement Trust Act, for exemption of acquisition of part of the premises following steps taken for acquisition of the whole amounted to this: that the provisions of Land Acquisition Act (as part of the Cal. Improvement Trust Act) were being put into force for the purpose of acquiring a part only of the premises in question..

C. Rule issued from an order of the President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, dated April 18, 1939.

Messrs. Surendra Madhab Mullick, Probodh Chandra Kar and Sukumar Ghose, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Bepin Chandra Mullik and Bireswar Bagchi, for the Opposite Party.

B. K. Mukherjea, J. — This rule is directed against an order passed by the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, dated April 18, 1939, rejecting a reference made to it by the First Land Acquisition Collector, Calcutta, under s. 49 (1), Land Acquisition Act. The material facts may be shortly stated as follows: Premises No. 40, Lake Road which comprises an area of 6B-5C-6ch of lands was scheduled for acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Cal. Improvement Act, under declaration No. 12578 L-A, dated June 19, 1937. One Saradindu Mukherji, who is stated to be the owner of the premises, applied to the Board of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta for exemption of this property from acquisition under s. 78, Cal. Improvement Act. This application was rejected. Thereupon there was an agreement entered into between the owner and the Board on January 24, 1939 by which a portion of the premises measuring 58ct 12ch only which was coloured blue in the map was to be acquired and the balance measuring 66ct 12ch, which was painted pink was exempted from acquisition. Proceedings were then taken up by the Collector for the acquisition of the blue plot only and the petitioners who are alleged to have huts on the pink portion filed applications before the Collector stating inter alia that the land to be acquired contained a part of the access from the lake to their structures and that filtered water connections and drains to their huts also ran through that land. It was further stated that they had a right to use the water of the tank and jhil in premises Nos. 40 and 40/1 Lake Road. As the aforesaid access and water connections were said to constitute an integral part of the huts in the excluded portion they prayed for the acquisition of these huts as well. Upon that the Collector made a reference to the Court under s. 49 (1), Land Acquisition Act, and the question referred for determination was, whether the portion of the land intended to be acquired formed a part of the house of the petitioners within the meaning of s. 49, Land Acquisition Act. The tribunal by its order mentioned aforesaid rejected the reference on the ground that the reference was incompetent. It is against this order that the present rule has been obtained.

Mr. Bepin Chandra Mullik who appears for the opposite party has raised a preliminary point and he has argued that as the order rejecting the reference could have been challenged by way of appeal the petition for revision does not lie. We do not think that this contention is sound. From the decisions of the tribunal only a limited appeal is given by the Act XVIII of 1911 and as the Preamble of that Act says, an appeal lies only from the award of the tribunal constituted under the Cal. Improvement Act of 1911, I am unable to hold that a decision on or a determination by the tribunal of any matter which has no reference to compensation in some form or other comes under the definition of an 'award.' That no appeal lies in such cases has been expressly held by a decision of this Court in Sarat Chandra Ghose v. Secretary of State (1). The case in Dalchand Singhi v. Secretary of State (2), upon which reliance has been placed by Mr. Bepin Chandra Mullik, cannot, in our opinion, be regarded as an authority in support of a contrary view. In that case it was not disputed that an appeal would lie only against an award but it was observed by the learned Judges that such orders had been dealt with in appeal by the Allahabad and Madras High Courts. The learned Judges however concluded by saying that as there was a petition in revision filed in that case upon which a rule was obtained they had ample authority to deal with the matter under s. 115, Civil P. C. We are unable to hold that the order passed by the tribunal in the present case was an appealable order.

Coming now to the merits of the case it would seem that the tribunal has rejected the reference relying on certain previous decisions of its own where under similar circumstances the reference was held to be incompetent. The reason in substance appears to be this. There was a declaration here made under s. 6, Land Acquisition Act, which covers the entire premises including both the pink and the blue plots. The agreement entered into between the trustees on the one hand and Saradindu Mukherji on the other was not in pursuance of cl. (4) of s. 78, Cal. Improvement Act, and consequently there was no abandonment within the meaning of cl. 5 of that section. It is said therefore that as there has not been an abandonment of the land acquisition proceedings with regard to the pink portion s. 49, Land Acquisition Act, is inapplicable, for it cannot be said that the provisions of the Act are being enforced for the acquisition of a part of the house, unless the acquisition of the lands upon which the remaining part of the house stands is abandoned. There can be no doubt, in my opinion, that unless at the present moment there has been an abandonment of the acquisition with regard to the pink portion no question of reference under s. 49, Land Acquisition Act, can possibly arise. But the error lies in assuming that the only way of abandoning acquisition is that provided by s. 78, Cal. Improvement Act. Section 78 lays down one particular method, according to which, if any area, the acquisition of which has been sanctioned by the Local Govt. is not required by the Board for the execution of the scheme the Board may abandon the acquisition proceedings in consideration of certain money payments being made by the owner or an agreement being executed by him in conformity with the provisions of that section. But even apart from s. 78, Land Acquisition Act, there is nothing in the Land Acquisition Act or the Cal. Improvement Act which prevents the acquiring authority from abandoning a portion of the land in respect of which proceedings under the Act have been taken. As was observed by D. N. Mitter, J. in Secretary of State v. Mahip Sha (3)

(1) 46 O 861; 50 Ind. Cas. 732; A I R 1919 Cal 86; 23 O WN 373.

(2) 43 O 665; 37 Ind. Cas. 11; A I R 1917 Cal 148.

"it was consistent with commonsense that the party which had been given power to acquire lands for certain purposes had also the power to abandon any such land which was intended to be acquired from acquisition unless there was provision in the statute preventing such piecemeal acquisition."

This is also the principle underlying s. 48, Land Acquisition Act. Under s. 24, Cal. Improvement Act, very comprehensive powers are given to the Board of Trustees and they can enter into and perform any contract which they might consider necessary for carrying out the purposes of the agreement. There is nothing in law therefore which prevents the Board from abandoning any portion of the land intended to be acquired in pursuance of a contract entered into under the provisions of s. 24, Cal. Improvement Act. Whether there has been abandonment or not on any particular case would of course depend upon the circumstances of that case. Mr. Bepin Ohandra Mullik contends before us that the agreement in this particular case cannot amount to an abandonment as there are various other things which are required to be done by the owner and unless these things are done the matter cannot be said to be complete. There is nothing however said on this point by the tribunal and we have no materials before us upon which we can hold that the acquisition of the pink portion has not been definitely abandoned. On the other hand the order of the Collector clearly suggests that the agreement has been acted upon and proceedings have been started to acquire the blue portion only to the exclusion of the pink plot.

In these circumstances it seems to me that if the petitioner's case is true, circumstances are present which would justify the Collector in making a reference under s. 49 (1), Land Acquisition Act, and in our opinion the matter ought to be investigated on its merits by the tribunal. The result is that the rule is made absolute. The order of the tribunal dated April 18, 1939 is set aside and the matter is sent back to him in order that the reference case may be disposed of on its merits and according to law. It is desirable that the reference should be heard in the presence of Mr. Saradindu Mukherji who is stated to be the owner of the plots and it would be open certainly to the opposite party to raise any other contention relating to the maintainability of the reference at the instance of the petitioners who are stated to be the tenants in occupation of certain huts upon the land. There will be no order as to costs in this rule.

Roxburgh, J.—On the merits the simple question is whether the application of the tenants under s. 49, Land Acquisition Act, 1894, was premature or not. The order of the tribunal is rather unfortunate in form, as it suggests that the only basis of decision is the fact that as Govt. might change its mind, and eventually go on with the acquisition, so the application of the tenants cannot be considered. The suit of a plaintiff might equally well be dismissed on the ground that he might subsequently change his mind and not execute his decree if obtained, and proviso 1 to s. 49 itself makes provision allowing the owner to change his mind at any time before the award is made. The point for decision is whether, under the law, circumstances exist by which the tenants have the right to make the application for a reference; this is to be decided by reference to the terms of s. 49 itself, and to the facts. Under sub-s. 1 of s. 49 the provisions of the Act are not to be put into force for the purpose of acquiring a part of a house, manufactory or building if the owner desire that the whole of such house, manufactory or building shall be acquired, and then under the terms of proviso 2 provision is made that if any question shall arise as to whether any land proposed to be taken under the Act does or does not form part of a house the Collector is to refer the matter to the Court. It will be seen that the precise time at which the reference is to be made is not clearly specified; certainly it must be made if the provisions of the Act have already and clearly been "put in force" but they are not inconsistent with a reference being made at an earlier stage. In the present case the method by which the provisions of the Act are to be put into force for the purpose of acquiring a portion of the premises in question is by way of declaration and notice for acquisition of the whole, followed by an agreement under s. 24, Cal. Improvement Act, made with the landlord for exempting a portion, and hence by eventual abandonment of the acquisition under s. 48. In such case it is even more difficult than in a case where the proposal to acquire a portion is a direct one to determine the precise point of time at which it may be said that the provisions of the Act are being put into force for the purpose of acquiring a portion. In the present case there was originally an application for action under s. 78, Cal. Improvement Act, but this was rejected by the trustees, and the present proposal for action under s. 24 was adopted, and has been carried out to the extent of a formal agreement having been made.

Mr. B. O. Mullik draws attention to the terms of sub-s. (5) of s. 78, to the effect that when an agreement has been executed in pursuance of sub-s. (4) or payment has been made under the proviso the proceedings for the acquisition shall be deemed to have been abandoned and contends that on the analogy of those provisions the stage for the present application in the analogous procedure by way of s. 24 and of eventual formal abandonment under s. 48, Land Acquisition Act, has not been reached, but consideration of these provisions seems to support rather the contrary view. It emphasizes the fact that in order to find out the whole land acquisition law applicable here we have to read the Cal. Improvement Trust Act and the Land Acquisition Act as one, and as has been pointed out in Secretary of State v. Hindusthan Co-operative Insurance Society Ltd. (4) incorporation of the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act into the provisions of the Cal. Improvement Trust Act is a case of legislation by reference, the terms incorporated being those of the Land Acquisition Act as it stood when it was adopted (in the schedule) and incorporated under ss. 69 and 71 (b), Cal. Improvement Act. In short the present action taken by way of agreement under s. 24, Cal. Improvement Trust Act, for exemption of acquisition of part of the premises following steps taken for acquisition of the whole amounts to this: that the provisions of Land Acquisition Act (as part of the Cal. Improvement Trust Act) are being put into force for the purpose of acquiring a part only of the premises in question. The Collector himself appears to have understood the position to be such for in his order of reference, after setting out the contentions of the applicants he concludes:

"I beg therefore to refer for the decision of the Court as to whether the portion of the premises intended to be acquired form part of the home of the petitioners within the meaning of s. 49 (1), Land Acquisition Act."

I think therefore that the application was not premature, and that the tribunal has failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3, s. 115—Compromise—Court cannot select some terms and pass decree in accordance with them while neglecting others—Limitation for filing revision in Rangoon High Court—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9—Suit under—Nature and scope—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 2 (d)—Consideration may move from third person—Contract—Stranger to, when can sue on it.

Parties to a suit can compromise their differences on any terms they please and they can include in those terms any matters, whether the subject-matter of the suit or not, and, under the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. C., the Court is compelled to pass a decree in accordance with the terms of the petition. It is not open to the Court to select some terms of the petition and pass a decree in accordance with those terms while neglecting the others. [p. 876, col. 2.]

It is a rule of practice in the Rangoon High Court that revisions may be filed at any time within 90 days of the date of the decree sought to be revised, and the applicant is entitled to utilize that rule of practice to the full. 52 Ind. Cas. 897 (1), referred to [p. 878, col. 1.]

In a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act the plaintiff must aver previous possession and dispossession by the defendants otherwise than in due course of law within six months of the suit being brought, and should aver nothing else, and the only prayer in such a suit can be a prayer for the recovery of possession. The decree must either dismiss the suit or order the plaintiffs to be put into possession by the defendants, such decree being based on previous possession and dispossession merely and not on title. "Consideration" as defined in s. 2 (d), Contract Act, shows that the consideration may move from a third person and need not necessarily move from the promisee. [p. 878, col. 1.]

A stranger to a contract can sue upon it at any rate in the following circumstances, namely, (a) where a party to the contract agrees with the stranger to pay him direct or becomes estopped from denying his liability to pay him personally and (b) where the contract creates a trust in favour of the stranger. 20 Ind. S. A. against the decree of the District Court, Myaungmya, dated August 5, 1937.

Mr. K. C. Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. K. Ray, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The incompetent way in which this litigation has been conducted has placed me in a position of great difficulty in endeavouring to do justice between the parties. The litigation originally arose out of a dispute regarding the ownership of the holding of agricultural land now in suit between U Baik and his wife Daw Po, on the one side, and U Po Hmyin and his wife Daw Zan Byu, on the other side. In Civil Regular Suit No. 3 of 1935 of the Township Court of Moulmeingyun U Po Hmyin and Daw Zan Byu sued the tenants of this land for recovery of rent for the agricultural year 1933-34. The defence of the tenants was that they were the tenants of U Baik and Daw Po and not of U Po Hmyin and Daw Zan Byu. U Baik was dead at the time that this suit was brought. Ma Hla Khin is the daughter of U Baik and Daw Po and T. D'Attaiides is her husband. He held a general power-of-attorney from both Daw Po and Ma Hla Khin. The suit in the Township Court never went to trial for the parties filed a joint petition, signed by themselves and their Pleaders, and by T. D'Attaiides and others as witnesses for the compromise of the suit. The terms of the petition were:

"(a) That there be a decree against the defendants.

(b) That after the passing of the decree the plaintiffs U Po Hmyin and Daw Zan Byu shall transfer the land gratis, for natural love and affection, either by sale deed of release to Da Po, Ma Hla Khin and Mr. T. D'Attaiides within 15 days from the passing of the decree.

(c) That the plaintiffs would not claim the said land any longer, for which the present rent suit is filed, and further undertake not to execute the decree until the land is transferred to Daw Po and others."

On the presentation of this petition the learned Township Judge passed the following order:

"Parties and Pleaders present. They file a joint petition for compromise decree on the terms contained in the petition. These terms are noted by the Court but not contained in the body of the decree as some portion of the terms are extraneous to the decree in suit.

ORDER

Let there be a decree for Rs. 240 with costs on the uncontested scale. The decree is not to be executed before the time stipulated in the joint petition."

And upon that there followed a decree for a sum of Rs. 240 with the further declaration that the decree should not be executable until the land had been transferred to Daw Po and her two relatives. Now, in declining to pass a decree in accordance with the terms of the petition the learned Township Judge acted without jurisdiction. Parties to a suit can compromise their differences on any terms they please and they can include in those terms any matters, whether the subject-matter of the suit or not, and, under the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. C., the Court is compelled to pass a decree in accordance with the terms of the petition. It is not open to the Court to select some terms of the petition and pass a decree in accordance with those terms while neglecting the others. Consequently, all those terms, including the terms regarding the transfer of the land to Daw Po, Ma Hla Khin and T. D'Attaiides, ought to be part of the decree in Civil Regular Suit No. 3 of 1935 of the Township Court of Moulmeingyun. Subsequently, Daw Po, Ma Hla Khin and T. D'Attaiides instituted Suit No. 10 of 1935 of the Sub-Divisional Court of Wakema against U Po Hmyin and Daw Zan Byu as defendants. This suit was tried by the Additional Sub-Divisional Judge, and the second appeal which is now before me arises out of this suit. Daw Po and Ma Hla Khin have died and T. D'Attalides has been adjudicated insolvent during the pendency of this second appeal. The Official Assignee has therefore been joined as an appellant as representing the estate of T. D'Attalides, and the other appellants are the legal representatives of Daw Po and Ma Hla Khin.

The title of the plaint in Suit No. 10 of 1935 of the Sub-Divisional Court was "suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act," and in the course of his judgment disposing of this suit the learned Additional Sub-Divisional Judge made reference to s. 9, Specific Relief Act. It is plain that neither the Pleadings who appeared in the suit nor the Additional Sub-Divisional Judge have any conception of the nature and scope of a suit under the provisions of s. 9, Specific Relief Act. The plaint in such a suit must aver previous possession and dispossession by the defendants otherwise than in due course of law within six months of the suit being brought, and should aver nothing else, and the only prayer in such a suit can be a prayer for the recovery of possession. The decree must either dismiss the suit or order the plaintiffs to be put into possession by the defendants, such decree being based on previous possession and dispossession merely and not on title. I shall, later in this judgment, have to return to the averments of the plaint in this suit, but for the present moment it suffices to say that the suit was fought throughout as a suit based on title for declaration of title and recovery of possession.

The learned Additional Sub-Divisional Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had not proved their title or their previous possession but gave them a decree declaring that the terms of the agreement of compromise and the decree in Suit No. 3 of 1935 of the Township Court of Moulmeingyun were binding on the defendants. Such a decree was, of course, valueless because it is unexecutable. As I have said, in the course of his judgment the learned Additional Sub-Divisional Judge referred to s. 9, Specific Relief Act, and against a decree in a suit under that section there is no right of appeal. Consequently, under the circumstances the present respondents took the only step that they could take, namely they made an application in revision to this Court (Civil Revision No. 386 of 1936), and in his judgment in that revision my learned brother Spargo pointed out that a suit did not become a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, merely because that section was mentioned in the plaint and the judgment, that the suit in question was plainly a suit for recovery of possession based on title, and that therefore an appeal lay to the District Court. He therefore dismissed the application in revision. The present respondents then filed a first appeal in the District Court of Myaungmya (Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1937). The appeal was, on the face of it, long time-barred, but the learned District Judge gave the present respondents the benefit of s. 5, Lim. Act, in a summary ex parte order without hearing the present appellants. This action of the learned District Judge caused further difficulty. When this second appeal was first heard by my learned brother Mosely the case had to be remanded to the District Court with instructions to the learned District Judge to comply with the law and come to a proper finding on the question of limitation after hearing the present appellant. This he has now done. He has come to the conclusion that the respondents had sufficient cause for not preferring their first appeal within the period of limitation prescribed, and exercised his discretion under s. 5, Lim. Act, in their favour, and on the merits he has allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants. Against these decisions the present appeal has been brought, and it has been canvassed before me both on the question of limitation and also on the merits.

The period prescribed for an appeal to the District Court is 60 days. The respondents did not file their application in revision to this Court until after a period of 82 days had lapsed from the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Court. Subsequently, after the judgment of Spargo, J., had been delivered in the revision case, a first appeal was not filed in the District Court until a period of 30 days had lapsed. It is urged on behalf of the appellants that the filing of the revision in this Court by the respondents was not a sufficient cause for the delay in filing the appeal and that, in any case, no proper explanation of the delay of 82 days in filing the revision, or of 30 days in filing the appeal after the judgment in the revision, has been given. In my opinion, the respondents were justified in filing their application in revision to this Court. In fact, on the plaintiff of the appellants in the original suit and the judgment of the learned Additional Sub-Divisional Judge, they had no other course open to them, for, if they had filed an appeal direct in the District Court it would undoubtedly have been rejected on the ground that no appeal lay; and therefore, in my opinion, the principle of s. 14 (1), Lim. Act, is applicable, and under s. 5 of that Act it must be held that the respondents had sufficient cause for not preferring their appeal during the time that they were prosecuting the revision before this Court. It is urged that they had no excuse for not filing their revision more promptly, but it is a rule of practice in this Court that revisions may be filed at any time within 90 days of the date of the decree sought to be revised, and the respondents were entitled to utilize that rule of practice to the full: see Sunierbai v. Collector of Belgaum (1). After Spargo, J., had delivered his judgment there was not, in my opinion, any undue delay. The respondents had to be informed by their Rangoon Advocate of the result of the revision application and they then had to come to Rangoon and obtain copies of the High Court judgment, before they could get their appeal accepted by the District Court, and for this purpose a delay of 30 days was not excessive. Consequently, in my opinion, the learned District Judge exercised his discretion under s. 5, Lim. Act, rightly in accepting the first appeal of the respondents.

Turning now to the merits of the appellant's case the learned District Judge has held that the appellants were not entitled to the declaration which has been given to them by the learned Additional Sub-Divisional Judge as they were not parties to the compromise agreement filed in the Township Court of Moulmeingyun, and further, so far as the appellants were concerned there was no consideration for the agreement. On the question of consideration the learned District Judge is clearly wrong. The consideration for the agreement was the withdrawal by the tenants of their defence in the rent suit in the Township Court and their consenting to a decree for the rent in favour of the respondents. "Consideration" is defined in s. 2 (d), Contract Act, and the words in that definition "the promisee or any other person" show that the consideration may move from a third person and need not necessarily move from the promisee. In this respect the law of contract in India and Burma differs from the English law of contract. There was ample consideration for this agreement.

The other ground of the learned District Judge's decision is a strict application of the principle laid down in Tweddle v. Atkinson (2), which decided that a person who is not a party to a contract cannot sue on it. But in England the authority of this case, which was decided in 1861, has been greatly weakened since the fusion of law and equity in a line of modern decisions of which I propose to mention only one: Les Affreteurs Reunis Societe Anonyme v. Leopold Walford (London) Limited (3). Moreover, Tweddle v. Atkinson (2), has never been the law in India. The question as to whether, and if so, to what extent, a third party may sue on a contract to which he is not a party has been considered in numerous cases of which I will cite four of the most important decisions: Debnarayan Dutt v. Chunilal Ghose (4), Subbu Chetti v. Arunachalam Chettiar (5) and Jagadamba Debya v. Bidhootibhusan Sarkar (6). These cases decided that a stranger to a contract can sue upon it at any rate in the following circumstances, namely (a) where a party to the contract agrees with the stranger to pay him direct or becomes estopped from denying his liability to pay him personally and (b) where the contract creates a trust in favour of the stranger. In Khirodebihari Dutt v. Mangobinda (7) the Calcutta High Court has now gone even further, and has held that a stranger to a contract can always sue on the contract if it is made for his benefit, and this last decision seems to be in accordance with the modern English cases.

It is now necessary to see what were the facts leading up to the compromise of the rent suit in the Township Court of Moulmeingyun, and on this point the evidence in Suit No. 10 of 1935 of the Sub-Divisional Court of Wakema leaves no room for doubt. T. D'Attalides, acting for himself, his wife and his mother-in-law, defended the suit in the Township Court on behalf of the tenants. He negotiated the compromise agreement with U Po Hmyin and T. D'Attaiides and U Po Hmyin were the real parties to this agreement. This is admitted by U Po Hmyin in his written statement in the present suit and also in his evidence. He set up that the written agreement was mistranslated to him and he was made to understand that he was to get a sum of Rs. 1,000 as well as one year's rent. Both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion that this defence was false, and all the evidence in the suit is to the effect that U Po Hmyin signed this agreement voluntarily with full knowledge of its contents. The real parties to this agreement were the appellants, on the one side, and the respondents, on the other. The two tenants signed it as bare trustees, their beneficiaries being the appellants. It is also urged that the respondents are now estopped from denying their liability to the appellants, and had they been paid the one year's rent which they were to obtain under the written agreement, I should have been inclined to hold that they were so estopped. T. D'Attaiides in his evidence states that he has paid this amount of Rs. 240, but as satisfaction of the Township Court decree has not been recorded I cannot accept this statement. However, it is quite clear that the tenant entered into this compromise agreement as trustees for the present appellants and hence, in accordance with the authorities which I have cited, the appellants are entitled to enforce this agreement against the respondents.

The decree which they have obtained is meaningless and worthless to them, and this is due to the defective nature of their plaint in the suit in the Sub-Divisional Court. Plainly, the suit should have been a suit for specific performance of the agreement, and the question which I have to decide is whether on the pleadings in the suit I can make a decree for specific performance in their favour. Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the plaint read as follows:

"5. That in U Po Hmyin v. Maung Ye Hmwe, O. R. Suit No. 3 of 1935 a compromise petition was filed (a certified copy of the same is hereto annexed) in which the defendants had agreed to relinquish their rights, title, and interest over the said paddy land in favour of the plaintiffs Daw Po, Ma Hla Khin and Mr. T. D'Attaiides in consideration of a decree being passed against the defendants in that suit. Accordingly the terms of the compromise were embodied in the compromise decree. A certified copy of the compromise petition and of the decree are herewith attached for ready reference. The plaintiffs thereupon entered upon the land and cultivated paddy for the year

1935-36 after having complied with the terms of the decree of February 5, 1935.

6. That nevertheless defendant No. 1 failed to fulfil his part of the contract embodied in the compromise petition."

And prayer (c) of the prayer of the plaint is as follows: "(C) that the terms of the compromise and the decree may be made binding on the defendants."

Now, had these two paragraphs been the only averments in the plaint and this prayer been the only prayer in the plaint, it would not have been difficult to construe that prayer as being a prayer for specific performance of the agreement of compromise. But, nevertheless, the appellants overloaded their plaint with numerous other averments which were all unnecessary, and a number of other prayers which could not be granted. However, I think that I am bound to construe the plaint as liberally as possible, having regard to the unsatisfactory nature of pleadings presented to Subordinate Courts by Pleaders of the lower grade, so as to do justice between the parties, but bearing in mind that a new case must not be made out which was not made out in the plaint.

The plaint undoubtedly sets up inter alia the agreement and a breach of the agreement by the respondents and it asks for a declaration that the agreement was binding on the respondents. Of course, such a declaration is, as I have already said, worthless, and if the prayer had been a prayer for specific performance instead of this bare declaration, that part of the plaint would have been properly a plaint of this nature, and after full consideration I have come to the conclusion that I shall not be going too far in construing the plaint accordingly and granting the appellants the relief which they intended to seek, and to which they are entitled.

The judgment and decree of the District Court on first appeal, dismissing the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants, are therefore set aside, and instead of the judgment and the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court of Wakema, the plaintiffs-appellants will be granted a decree for the specific performance of the compromise agreement filed on January 30, 1935 in Civil Regular Suit No. 3 of 1935 U Po Hmyin v. Maung Ye Hmwe, O. R. Suit No. 3 of 1935, of the Township Court of Moulmeingyun, and the respondents are ordered to execute a registered instrument relinquishing, in favour of the appellants all right, title and interest which they may, have in the land in suit, namely holding No. 8 of 1935-36 in Kyonepainggyi kwin.

Mouléingyun township, measuring approximately 32 acres, and it is further ordered that they shall execute this registered instrument within one month of the date of this judgment. The appellants are entitled to their costs as against the respondents in all three Courts, Advocate's fee in this Court eight gold mohurs.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 171—Winding up order—Subsequent suit without leave—Jurisdiction of Court to grant leave to continue suit, under s. 171—Jurisdiction of Court to dismiss suit on application for leave.

Under s. 171, Companies Act, leave to proceed with a pending legal proceeding can only be granted where that proceeding has been instituted prior to the winding up order. The Court has no jurisdiction to give the plaintiff leave to continue a suit instituted without leave subsequent to the winding-up order. The Court has inherent jurisdiction to dismiss a suit on an interlocutory application for leave to continue the suit.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee (Jr.), for the Applicant.

Mr. R. S. Bachawat, for the Respondents.

Order.—This application raises a question of some importance. In December last year the plaintiff filed a suit against Kanhaiyalal Lohawalla and the Rajputana Films Co., Ltd. It now appears that prior to the institution of the suit, that is to say, on October 6, 1938, an order was made at the instance of a creditor by the District Judge of Ajmere for the compulsory liquidation of the defendant company. The plaintiff states that at the time when the suit was instituted he was unaware of the order for compulsory liquidation, and accordingly he made no application to the Court having jurisdiction in the winding up proceedings for leave under s. 171, Companies Act, to sue the company. The liquidator now applies that the suit should be dismissed against the company as being incompetent on account of the plaintiff's failure to ask for and obtain leave to sue.

The position, when a suit has been instituted against a company after an order for its compulsory liquidation without the leave of the Court, was considered by me in In re Steel Construction Co., Ltd., (1). In that case the winding up order had been made by this Court, and an application was made by the liquidator to restrain a suit subsequently instituted in the Court of the first Subordinate Judge of Comilla. It appears from the report that the suggestion was made that the application to restrain the proceedings in the Comilla suit should be adjourned in order to give the plaintiff an opportunity of regularizing his position by asking for and obtaining leave under s. 171. As to that I observed:

"In my opinion if such application were made the Court would have no jurisdiction to grant it. As I read s. 171 it means that leave to proceed with a pending legal proceeding can only be granted where that proceeding has been instituted prior to the winding up order. I do not consider that the Court has jurisdiction to give the plaintiff leave to continue a suit instituted without leave subsequent to the winding-up order."

It has been pointed out to me that the opposite view has been taken in the Allahabad High Court and in the Bombay High Court, though, it seems that my view has commended itself to the Lahore High Court. There is clearly no authority binding on me which compels me to modify the opinion I expressed in In re Steel Construction Co., Ltd. (1). On the authority of that case I feel constrained to accede to the liquidator's application. On the assumption that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the winding up order, my decision is undoubtedly productive of hardship. I suggested that a solution might be found if the plaintiff were to make an application to withdraw this suit with leave to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action, and thereafter were to apply to the Court in which the company is being wound up for leave to commence fresh proceedings. That suggestion however did not commend itself to the plaintiff, and there may be very good reasons for this.

It has been urged that there is no rule which specifically empowers the Court to dismiss a suit on an interlocutory application in circumstances such as the present. That indeed must be conceded, but it is by no means uncommon for the Court to make order in interlocutory proceedings dismissing a suit, where it is clear that there is no jurisdiction to entertain it. In my opinion the Court has inherent jurisdiction to take such a course, and if the Court considers that at some stage or other it will be compelled, because of the absence of leave under s. 171, to dismiss a suit as against a defendant company, I cannot see that any harm is done by taking this course at the earliest opportunity. I have been referred to cases in England where it has been held that the Court will not stay proceedings where the company is a necessary party to a suit framed against it and other defendants. I will assume, though a perusal of the plaint does not convince me of this, that if the company is dismissed from the suit, the Court cannot grant relief against the other defendant. However, I do not think that this is a consideration which ought to influence me in view of my previous decision. In these circumstances the suit must be dismissed as against the company with costs, including the costs of this application. At the same time if the liquidator is willing to entertain the company's claim, nothing that I have said should affect his decision, whether, if the main claim is maintainable, the plaintiff should be allowed to add to it any of the costs which he has incurred in respect of these proceedings.

AMBER ALI, J.

KHATOON

Married Women's Property Act (III of 1874), s. 6 (2)—Irrespective of any Official Trustees Act, existence of Official Trustee capable of receiving money under s. 6 (2), is sufficient—He is payee.

The Official Trustees Act of 1913 has not caused a gap in the evolution of the Official Trustee. The Official Trustee under the old Act is not of a different species of being from the Official Trustee under the later Act of 1913. The Official Trustee of to-day, notwithstanding more elaborate plumage, is but the existing living representative of what is not an extinct race. Even if the Act of 1864 had been wholly repealed saving the existence of the Official Trustee, nevertheless s. 6 (2), Married Women's Property Act, remains. Hence irrespective of any particular Official Trustees Act, if there is now an Official Trustee of Bengal capable of receiving the money under cl. 2 of s. 6 that is sufficient. He is the payee. 170 Ind. Cas. 912 (1), explained.

Sir Asoke Roy (Advocate-General) and Dr. S. K. Gupta, for the Official Trustee.

Mr. Kamala Bose, for the Insurance Company.

Order.—This is an application by the Official Trustee for directions, the practical question asked being, how he should dispose of the sum of Rs. 4,588 in his hands. The short facts are as follows: One Mohamed Ghyasuddin effected a policy of insurance with the Sun Life Insurance Co., of Canada, expressed to be payable to his own wife, Zebunnessa Khatoon. On November 12, 1938, the company paid the amount mentioned to the Official Trustee of Bengal, purporting to do so under s. 6, Married Women's Property Act (Act III of 1874). There was some other claim to this fund by another member of this family but that claim has now been withdrawn and there is no dispute among the members of the family. On December 15, 1938 the solicitors of the Insurance Company demanded from the Official Trustee repayment of the amount by reason of a certain decision of this Court in Haridassi Dassi v. Manufacturers Life Insurance Co. (1).

The provision of law with which we are concerned is, as I have said, s. 6, Married Women's Property Act and I shall discuss this section as if the sub-clauses of this section were separately numbered. By virtue of cl. 1 without a doubt the effect of this policy is to create a trust in favour of the widow of the assured; cl. 2 indicates who shall be the trustee of that trust. It provides in other words for the legal ownership of the fund. It reads:

"When the sum secured by a policy becomes payable, it shall, unless special trustees are duly appointed to receive and hold the same, be paid to the Official Trustee of the Presidency in which the office at which the insurance was effected, is situate, and shall be received and held by him upon the trusts expressed in the policy or such of them as are then existing."

Clause 3 declares that in reference to such sum, that is, the sum paid to and received by the Official Trustee, he shall stand in the same position in all respects as if he had been appointed trustee thereof by a High Court under Act XVII of 1864, s. 10. That Act is the Act relating to the Official Trustee in force at the time of the Married Women's Property Act. There had been earlier Acts relating to the Official Trustee as there is now a later Act of 1913.

The decision in Haridassi Dassi v. Manufacturers Life Insurance Co., (1) is one which, like so many others, cannot be appreciated without reference to the peculiar facts. In that case the company's first defence to a suit by a widow, was that as mere beneficiary she could not sue, an objection of non-joinder. Panckridge, J., promptly appointed trustees under the first portion of cl. 2 of s. 6. The company then turned round and took a second objection, namely that these trustees were not properly appointed and that under the Act it must be the Official Trustee and no other. On this point being taken, Lord-Williams, J., was met with a further difficulty, namely that the Official Trustee refused to act for want of funds. The learned Judge therefore in order to do justice, was disposing of a technical objection, and with regard to the Official Trustee, seeking to be disembarassed of an unwilling horse. The case before me is perfectly simple. Should difficulties such as were raised before Lord-Williams, J., be presented in any other case before me, I will consider myself free to reconsider my decision.

Before I deal with the only point on which I venture to disagree with the learned Judge's final view, I desire to state the two points, (dealt with at p. 519* of the report), on which, although they do not arise before me, it must not be understood that I disagree, namely the power of this Court to appoint other trustees under the first portion of s. 6, and secondly, the beneficiaries' right to sue. The only point on which I have to express a different view is that discussed in the second column of p. 518* of the report, the question being whether there is in existence an Official Trustee to whom the fund can be paid in pursuance of cl. 2 of s. 6.

The learned Judge finally and contrary to his first impression came to the conclusion that there was no such officer. This view was based on a comparison between the Official Trustees Act of 1864 and the Official Trustees Act of 1913. He was impressed by the fact that there is liberty under s. 7 of the latter Act to the Official Trustee either to accept or refuse a trust. He was further impressed by the fact that under s. 10 of the former Act, the Official Trustee's consent is required. As regards the latter point, the section appears to be the same. In the case before Lord-Williams, J., the question of consent was from a practical point of view most material. The Official Trustee was either refusing or seeking to impose conditions. The learned Judge was obviously impressed with the inconvenience at least of having an officer appointed by law to receive the money, who might refuse to take action on the ground of want of finance, and who might and apparently did contend that he was not bound to act as trustee until he actually received the money. That question does not arise before me. As I have said, the question whether the Official Trustee, being the person made payee by the Act itself is entitled to refuse to enforce a trust is a question with which I am not called upon to deal. It may be argued that the Act creates him beneficiary of one trust and trustee of another trust in favour of the married woman. As I say, that difficulty does not arise before me, and on a pure question of construction I feel myself at liberty to agree with what the learned Judge has stated to be his first impression. Shortly put my view is as follows: Before the Act of 1913, cl. 2 of s. 6, Married Women's Property Act was quite sufficient. It says that the proceeds of the policy shall be paid and shall be received by the Official Trustee. It is not necessary to proceed to the third clause. In my view, irrespective of any particular Official Trustees Act, if there is now an Official Trustee of Bengal capable of receiving the money under cl. 2 of s. 6 that is sufficient. He is the payee.

But what has the Act of 1913 done? In my view it has not caused a gap in the evolution of the Official Trustee. In my view the Official Trustee under the old Act is not of a different species of being from the Official Trustee under the later Act of 1913. The Official Trustee of to-day, notwithstanding more elaborate plumage, is but the existing living representative of what is not an extinct race. My own view is that even if the Act of 1864 had been wholly repealed, saving the existence of the Official Trustee, nevertheless s. 6 (2), remains. In point of fact, and this point was never argued before the learned Judge, by reason of the General Clauses Act, s. 8, we have to read in the third clause of s. 6, Married Women's Property Act, for the Act of 1864 the Act of 1913. That is one answer to the theory of break in evolution.

Another answer is to be found in another section the effect of which is to provide for the continuity of office, I think s. 15. While therefore I should under ordinary circumstances have had great hesitation in differing from the learned Judge, I feel myself at liberty to agree with his first impression and to hold that s. 6 (2) applies and that the Official Trustee, unless the other trustees are appointed, is the person to receive the fund and bound to hold it upon the trusts created. The directions I therefore give are that the Official Trustees do not return the fund but hold it upon trusts created by the insurance policy in question and by operation of law, and do dispose of the fund accordingly.

With regard to the costs of this application I have been given able and ample assistance. I understand that the costs of this application are not going to fall on the fund. With regard to the costs of the ultimate beneficiary, I think she also should not pay any costs, and I suggest that the costs of her Counsel appearing may be set off against the commission due to the estate in respect of the fund. Certified for Counsel. The fund may be made over to the nominee under the policy. The Official Trustee will pay the balance of the money after deducting his commission as aforesaid to Zebunnessa Khatoon. Payment already made by the Insurance Company operates to discharge the Insurance Company.

Dr. Gupta has addressed me on the direction to the effect that the costs of Zebunnessa Khatoon may be set off against the commission due. He has pointed out that this is a dispute in which she need not strictly speaking have appeared, and that as it is, the Official Trustee has incurred costs which are not being thrown upon the fund. Nevertheless I think she has incurred some costs for appearance. She is the beneficiary. She is interested as to who is to be her trustee, and in the circumstances of the case I allow my direction to stand. It is not in any way to form a precedent. The costs in question, no affidavits having been filed by her, are only the fee payable to Counsel on a Chamber application.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 8—Applicability—Suit by panchayat—All members not on record—Provisions of O. I, r. 8 not invoked—Suit must fail.

Order I, r. 8, Civil P. C., is often referred to as a rule which applies when the suit is brought by a member of the public on behalf of the public or by a member of a particular community on behalf of the community or by a member of a class on behalf of that class.

Where in a suit brought by a panchayat all the members of the panchayat are not on record, nor has permission under O. I, r. 8 been obtained by those members who are on record to represent the rest of the members who are interested in the suit, the suit must fail. Mahomed v. Husen (2) and 143 Ind. Cas. 665 (3), relied on. 127 Ind. Cas. 542 (1), distinguished.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hukumatrai M. Eidnani, for Respondents. Nos. 6 and 7.

Davis, J. C.—This is an appeal against the judgment of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Sukkur dismissing an appeal against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Rohri, who dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the suit was one clearly which fell under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., that there were numerous persons interested in the suit, namely, the panchayat of the village of Kadirpur and the plaintiffs on the record were not properly authorized to represent them. The case of the appellants as put before us is firstly that the suit was in reality brought by plaintiff No. 1 who is a Modi of the jagir of which the first 5 five defendants are haris, that he advanced to them seeds and money and that in a document signed by them they acknowledged their indebtedness. Further it is said that even if it was the panchayat and not the Modi who advanced money to the haris and was entitled to get back its money, nevertheless sufficient members of the panchayat have been put on the record as plaintiffs and they adequately represent the panchayat for the purpose of this suit, and great reliance is placed upon the judgment of the Privy Council in Bhagvanpuri v. Secretary of State (1), p. 1517. The document on the record on which the plaintiffs place great reliance and which indeed shows the relationship between the parties recites that there was a disagreement between the Raj Mahajan and the panchayat; formerly there was a Modi named Hakumatmal appointed by the Raj Mahajan but the panchayat had appointed another Modi named Narumal Mulomal and in consequence there was a dispute and consequent confusion as to the money and seeds advanced by Narumal and Hakumatmal. The am mukhtiar Imam Bakhsh Khan had introduced further complications and it was finally agreed that the am mukhtiar should recover and pay Narumal's advances to Narumal and that both the Modis Hakumatmal and Narumal should make the batai of the jagir. It was agreed thereafter that Narumal the Modi should have no interest in the batai of the jagir and in future the jagirdar would appoint a Modi of his choice.

This settlement was not signed by the Modi, plaintiff Narumal at all: it was signed by plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5; but it makes it as clear as can be that the Modi Narumal when he sued in this suit for Rs. 220-5-6 and 39 kharars and 3 tokas and 7½ darries of wheat, was not suing as the learned Advocate for the appellants now says, as the village Modi or the village money-lender asking for the return of loans made by him personally to the haris of the jagir. This agreement to which plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 have put their signatures clearly shows that it was the panchayat as such which advanced seeds and takvai to the haris and it was for this reason that plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 joined themselves as plaintiffs in the suit and did not leave the matter to plaintiff No. 1, the Modi alone. The panchayat as such was interested in this suit; it was they who claimed the money and it is clear that in order that defendants must be bound, all those persons who constitute the panchayat or their representatives duly authorized must be upon the record before the suit is properly framed. But all the members of the panchayat are not upon the record, nor has the procedure laid down in O. I, r. 8, been followed and therefore we think it is clear that both the learned trial Judge and the learned appellate Judge were right when they come to the conclusion that this was a suit to which O. I, r. 8 applied. The learned Appellate Judge points out that this is not a suit of the kind to which rulings relating to suits by members of the public apply, for it is a suit akin to that brought by an unregistered society or by a club. Order I, r. 8 is often referred to as a rule which applies when the suit is brought by a member of the public on behalf of the public or by a member of a particular community on behalf of the community or by a member of a class on behalf of that class. The words in O. I, r. 8 are perfectly clear and appropriate; they are

"where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons

and applying those words to this case it is clear that the panchayat consists of numerous persons. It consists really of all the elders of this village of Kadirpur, a fluctuating body, varying from time to time, but certainly all the members of the panchayat are not upon the record, nor have those upon the record obtained permission under O. I, r. 8 to represent the other members of the panchayat, who undoubtedly exist and who are undoubtedly interested in this suit. But, said the learned Advocate for the appellants this is not necessary because there is now a judgment of the Privy Council in Bhagvanpuri v. Secretary of State (1), whereby some persons are now allowed to represent others without the application of O. I r. 8, Civil P. C. But reading through that judgment it would appear that their Lordships were of the opinion upon the facts that all those interested in the suit were upon the record. In that case the defendants were elected mahants or managers of an akhara (math) at the Kumbh at Hardwar. These elected managers gave a power of attorney, which was still in force at the time of the proceedings to one Hardayal Girji who was actually managing the akhara properties in virtue of this power of attorney.

Therefore it would appear from the facts of that case that the persons entitled to deal with the property of the math were the mahants or managers and Hardayal Girji, their duly appointed attorney. The learned Advocate for the appellants says that if we accept the argument of the learned Judges in the case now before us then in the Privy Council case it was not sufficient to bring the Managers of the akhara upon the record; it was necessary to bring upon the record all those Nangas or naked persons, who at the Kumbh elected the Managers. But the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council proceeded upon the basis that the mahants were lawfully entitled to manage the math property, so that it could be said that all the persons interested were properly upon the record. It cannot be said that the facts of the case in Bhagvanpuri v. Secretary of State (1), are in any way comparable with the facts in this case. The facts in this case are clearly more comparable to a case reported in Mahomed v. Husen (2), where the suit was brought on behalf of the panchayat and the plaintiffs were told to amend their plaint in accordance with the provisions of O. I. r. 8. There is a recent judgment of the Privy Council in Kumaravelu Chettiar v. Ramaswami Ayyar (3), in which this question of representation under O. I. r. 8 is discussed at length. Order I, r. 8, their Lordships point out, forms an exception to the general principle that all persons interested in a suit shall be parties thereto and being an exception to the general law the provisions laid down by O. I. r. 8 must be strictly followed. They have not been followed in this case. We do not see how it can be said that plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 were not necessary parties to the suit and that the suit could have proceeded with Narumal the Modi as plaintiff alone, because it is a case of plaintiffs No. 2 to 5 that it was the panchayat which was primarily interested; Narumal was the Modi acting under their orders, but advancing and recovering not his own money but the money of the panchayat. We think therefore that the learned Judges of both the Courts below were right in their conclusions that this was a case where numerous persons were interested within the meaning of O. I. r. 8, that these persons were not upon the record and no attempts have been made to invoke the provisions of O. I. r. 8. They therefore rightly dismissed the suit and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Order accordingly.

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1931), s. 5 (2)—Scope—Court refusing to grant instalments on finding that applicant is not agriculturist—S. 5 (2) applies to such case—Appeal under s. 5 (2) failing—No revision lies.

The words "refuses to grant instalments" in s. 5, U. P. Agri. Relief Act are unqualified. They cover cases of refusal on the ground that the applicant is not an agriculturist or does not fulfil the requirements laid down by s. 8 of the Act. The issue whether the applicant is an agriculturist is not an incidental issue or an issue the decision of which alone would determine the jurisdiction of the Court to grant instalments. The Court passing the decree alone has jurisdiction to convert it into a decree for instalments and where in the exercise of that jurisdiction it has refused to grant instalments on the finding that the applicants are not agriculturists, s. 5 (2) has application to such a case and when an appeal has been preferred under s. 5 (2) the decision of the Appellate Court confirming that of the trial Court is final and no revision lies. 184 Ind. Cas. 768 (1), followed.

App. and C. Mis. App. for revision of the order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated June 7, 1939.

Mr. Mohammad Hafeez, for Opposite Party No. 1.

Judgment.—The facts leading up to this revision are that Haji Sheikh Mohammad Abdul Haq, opposite party No. 1 and one Abdullah obtained a decree for possession and mesne profits against Ram Swarup, opposite party No. 2, and the applicants from the Court of the Civil Judge of Bahraich on September 7, 1935. Abdullah assigned his rights under the decree in favour of Sheikh Mohammad Abdul Haq, opposite party No. 1, and he alone now is entitled to execute the decree. The applicants made an application under ss. 5 and 30 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act praying for instalments and reduction of interest.

The trial Court held that it was not proved that the applicants were agriculturists at the date of the suit, which was instituted on May 18, 1935, and rejected the application.

The applicants went up in appeal before the District Judge. It may be observed here that so far as the dismissal of the relief for reduction of interest under s. 30 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act was concerned, no appeal was maintainable against it, and therefore, we are no longer concerned with that relief. So far as the relief for the conversion of the decree for instalments is concerned the appeal was maintainable in the Court of the District Judge under cl. (2) of s. 3. The learned District Judge agreed with the trial Court in holding that the applicants could not claim the benefit of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act inasmuch as they had failed to prove that the income-tax paid by them was not in excess of the local rates payable by them and dismissed the appeal.

This is a revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C. against the order in appeal passed by the learned District Judge.

By s. 5 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act the decision of the lower Appellate Court has been made final, and by a recent Full Bench case of this Court in Mahipal Singh v. Kamta Prasad, 1939 O. W. N. 970 (1) it has been held that the provision in s. 5 (2) of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act making the decision of the Appellate Court final not only debars a further appeal against it but also prevents interference with it in revision so that no revision lies against the order of the learned District Judge refusing instalments under s. 5 of the Act.

The learned Counsel for the applicants has contended that s. 5 of the Act is applicable when it has been decided that the applicant is an agriculturist and that that section does not arise for application in the present case where the two Courts have held that the applicants have not proved themselves to be agriculturists. It is contended that the order of the learned District Judge does not, therefore, fall under cl. (2) of s. 5 of the Act and the Full Bench case is not applicable to it.

Clause (1) of s. 5 lays down that notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil P. O., V of 1908, the Court shall, on the application of the judgment-debtor, direct that any decree for money or preliminary decree for sale or foreclosure passed by it, against an agriculturist, shall be converted into a decree for payment by instalments. The word "agriculturist" is defined in s. 2 (2) of the Act, and for the purposes of applications under Chap. II of the Act, in which s. 5 falls, certain further requirements are laid down by s. 8 which must be fulfilled before a person can be deemed to be an agriculturist for the purposes of that Chapter. The Court which passed the decree has jurisdiction to convert the decree for payment of money into a decree for payment by instalments provided the applicant is an agriculturist. The Court which has got jurisdiction to fix instalments has also jurisdiction to decide with reference to ss. 2 (2) and 8 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act whether the applicant is an agriculturist or not. If the Court finds that the judgment-debtor is not an agriculturist, then the Court has to refuse the grant of instalments, and if there is a refusal to grant instalments, the order of the Court is appealable to the Court to which the Court passing the decree is immediately subordinate. The words

"refuses to grant instalments" are unqualified. They cover cases of refusal on the ground that the applicant is not an agriculturist or does not fulfil the requirements laid down by s. 8 of the Act. The issue whether the applicant is an agriculturist is not an incidental issue or an issue the decision of which alone would determine the jurisdiction of the Court to grant instalments. The Court passing the decree alone had jurisdiction to convert it into a decree for instalments and it is in the exercise of that jurisdiction that it has refused to grant instalments on the finding that the applicants are not agriculturists. The applicants themselves had a recourse to cl. (2) of s. 5 of the Act when they filed their appeal in the Court of the learned District Judge. The contention of the learned Counsel that s. 5 (2) of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act has no application has no force. In our opinion, the Full Bench case referred to above is fully applicable to the present case and the present revision is not maintainable on the view taken in that case.

The result is that the application fails and is dismissed with costs.

As the revision application has been dismissed, Civil Misc. Application No. 699 of 1939 is also rejected and the order dated September 26, 1939, passed thereon is vacated.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 1—Proceeding for grant of letters of administration—Application for injunction restraining certain persons from paying money belonging to estate lying with them, to certain persons—If falls under O. XXXIX, r. 1—Power of Chartered High Court to grant injunction apart from provision of O. XXXIX, r. 1—Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1925), s. 5 (1)—Deceased nominating certain person to receive amount to his credit in Provident Fund—Such sum, if forms part of estate of deceased.

It is clear from the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 1, Civil P. O. that before an application for injunction can be granted under that Rule the applicant must show that the property with respect to which an injunction is prayed for, is property in dispute in a suit. In a proceeding for the grant of letters of administration it cannot be said that there is any property in dispute. No question regarding title to property can be decided in an application for probate or letters of administration. An application made in such proceedings for an injunction restraining certain persons from withdrawing certain sums alleged to appertain to the estate of the deceased and restraining various authorities with whom these sums are lying, from paying them out, until the disposal of the application for letters of administration, cannot be brought within the scope of O. XXXIX, r. 1. 27 Ind. Cas. 617 (1), relied on.

Although the application cannot be brought within the scope of O. XXXIX, r. 1, a Chartered High Court is not powerless to grant an injunction otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 1 if a proper case is made out. A Chartered High Court, has an inherent jurisdiction to grant injunctions operating in personam under circumstances and conditions other than those set out in the Civil P. O., where the ends of a justice so require. Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (2), relied on.

Where a deceased has nominated certain person as a person to whom the sum standing to his credit in the Railway Provident Fund should be paid, that sum does not form part of the estate of the deceased and it cannot be disposed of by the deceased in his will.

Mr. Sankar Banerjee, for Miss Lumsden.

Mr. Kamal Sarkar, for Leo Martin.

Order.—This is an application for an order restraining certain authorities of the B. N. Ry. from making payments of money lying with them which are alleged to appertain to the estate of one Stanley Austin Cardigan Martin, deceased, and restraining Miss. E. A. Lumsden from withdrawing or receiving payments of the aforesaid money. The facts leading to this application briefly are as follows. Stanley Austin Cardigan Martin was an employee of the B. N. Ry. He died on December 3, 1938 leaving a minor son. The petitioner is the deceased's brother, Leo Joseph Martin. He alleges that Stanley Martin executed a will before his death disposing of all his property. The property consists of the following items: (1) Money lying with the B. N. Ry. employees Mutual Benefit Fund, Kidderpore, Rs. 1,500. (2) Money lying with the B. N. Ry. Mutual Family Death Benefit Fund Ltd., Bilaspur Rs. 2,000. (3) Money lying with the B. N. Ry. being the provident fund, gratuity and unpaid salary, Rs. 25,240-11-0.

The petitioner is one of the legatees under the will and he has applied for the grant of letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed. According to the terms of the will, all the property left by the deceased is given to the mother of the deceased and to the petitioner except a sum of Rs 5,000 which the petitioner is directed to spend for the 'education and wants of the deceased's minor child Ian Martin.' The petitioner states that Miss Lumsden who is the sister of the deceased wife of the testator is about to withdraw the different sums mentioned above from the B. N. Ry. on the ground that she has been appointed a guardian of the minor and on the ground that the minor has been appointed a nominee to whom these different sums are to be paid on the death of the testator. The petitioner's case is that these sums should be disposed of in accordance with the terms of the will and that there should be an injunction restraining Miss Lumsden from withdrawing these sums and restraining the various authorities with whom these sums are lying, from paying them out, until the disposal of the application for letters of administration. Miss Lumsden opposes this application. The first ground taken on her behalf is that the application is not maintainable at law. Secondly, she says that even if this application is maintainable, no circumstances have been established which would justify the Court in granting the injunction prayed for.

I shall consider first the question regarding the maintainability of this application. I have no doubt that this application is not one which can be made under O. XXXIX, Civil P. O. It is clear from the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 1 that before an application for injunction can be granted under that rule the applicant must show that the property with respect to which an injunction is prayed for is property in dispute in a suit. Now, this application has been made in a proceeding for the grant of letters of administration. In such a proceeding, it cannot be said that there is any property in dispute. No question regarding title to property can be decided in an application, for probate or letters of administration. This principle has been affirmed in a large number of cases of this Court. There is thus no property in dispute in the application for letters of administration out of which the present application arises. The application for injunction, therefore, is not one which can be brought within the scope of O. XXXIX, r. 1. I am supported in this view by the decision of this Court in Nirode Barani Debi v. Chamalkarini Debi (1).

Although the application cannot be brought within the scope of O. XXXIX,

(1) 19 Q W N 205; 27 Ind. Cas. 617; A I R 1915 Cal. 565.

r. 1, this Court is not powerless to grant an injunction otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 1 if a proper case is made out. It has been held that this Court, being a Chartered High Court, has an inherent jurisdiction to grant injunctions operating in personam under circumstances and conditions other than those set out in the Civil P. O., where the ends of justice so require: vide Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (2). Bearing this in mind, I propose to examine whether the applicant has made out a good case which would justify me in exercising this inherent jurisdiction. It has been proved from the affidavits and the correspondence that out of the sum of Rs. 25,240-11-0 confined in the third item of property a sum of Rs. 19,600 is lying to the credit of the deceased in the Provident Fund of the B. N. Railway. This sum is accepted by learned Counsel for both sides as being correct. Now this amount is affected by the provisions of the Provident Funds Act (Act XIX of 1925). Section 5 (1) of this Act states that notwithstanding any disposition, whether testamentary or otherwise by a subscriber to a Railway Provident Fund of the sum standing to his credit in the Fund or any part thereof, any nomination duly made in accordance with the rules of the Fund, which purports to confer upon any person the right to receive the whole or any part of such sum on the death of the subscriber, shall be deemed to confer such right absolutely until such nomination is varied by another nomination or is expressly cancelled by the subscriber. It is admitted that the deceased nominated his son Ian Martin as being the person to whom the sum should be paid. That being so, the disposition by the testator in his will cannot affect this sum. The railway authorities have written that they will not pay this sum to anybody until a proper guardian is appointed by the Court of the minor, Ian Martin and that they propose to pay this sum to such guardian. In my opinion, this sum of Rs. 19,600 does not form part of the estate of the deceased and it cannot be disposed of by the deceased in his will. That being so, there should be no injunction with respect to this amount.

As regards the other sums of money lying with the B. N. Railway Employees Mutual Benefit Fund, Kidderpore, and the B. N. Railway Mutual Family Death Benefit Fund Ltd., Bilaspur, and as regards the balance of the money lying with the B. N. Railway as gratuity and unpaid salary, there is a substantial question involved regarding whether these sums form the assets of the deceased's estate or whether they are the property of the minor son of the deceased irrespective of the will alleged to have been executed by the deceased. The deceased appointed his son as his nominee to receive the amount lying to his credit in the Mutual Benefit Fund and the Mutual Family Death Benefit Fund. But whether this nomination would prevail against the administrator or executor of the estate of the deceased is a question of some difficulty and it will have to be decided in proper proceedings for that purpose. I do not express my opinion one way or the other on this point. Further, it is pointed out on behalf of Miss Lumsden that she will challenge the validity of the will. In these circumstances I think that it is essential that no one should be permitted to receive these sums until the question of the validity of the will and the representation to the estate of the deceased is decided. I think this is a fit case in which the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to grant an injunction should be exercised. I accordingly direct that Miss Lumsden be restrained from withdrawing these sums, that is to say from withdrawing any of the aforesaid sums other than the sum of Rs. 19,600 till the final disposal of the application for the grant of letters of administration or until further orders.

The Secretaries of the B. N. Railway Employees Mutual Benefit Fund, Kidderpore and of the B. N. Railway Mutual Family Death Benefit Fund Ltd., Bilaspur, and the Chief Auditor of the B. N. Railway, Kidderpore, are also hereby restrained from making any payment of any of the aforesaid sums other than the sum of Rs. 19,600 mentioned above to any person till the final disposal of this application for letters of administration or until further orders. There is no order of injunction restraining any one from receiving or paying the sum of Rs. 19,600. In the circumstances of this case I consider that the costs of all parties to this application do come out of the estate.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1 (u), O. XLI, r. 23—Order held one under O. XLI, r. 23 and appealable—Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 9—“Party”, if includes his agent and duly authorised Pleader.

Where the operative portion of the appellate order is “I set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court and allow the appeal of plaintiff No. 3 with costs. The case will be sent back and retried according to law from the stage where it has been left by the learned Munsif,” the order is an order of remand contemplated by O. XLI, r. 23 of the Civil P. C., and an appeal lies against such order under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u). [p. 889, col. 2.]

In s. 9, Oaths Act, the expression “any party to any judicial proceeding” must be interpreted as including the Counsel or agent duly authorised representing him in the case. 114 Ind. Cas. 759 (1), relied on, Sadashiv Rayaji v. Maruti Vithal (2), not followed. [p. 891, col. 1.]

If a Pleader is authorised by the vakalatnama in his favour to do all proper patra in the case and to represent his client in a litigation and to present all sorts of applications which may become necessary, even though no express power to compromise the case on his behalf may have been conferred upon the Pleader, still the Pleader being a duly authorised person to represent the client would be fully entitled to bind the client by offering to abide by the special oath of the opposite party. For the purposes of s. 9 all that is necessary is that the Pleader or the agent should be considered a duly authorised agent on behalf of his party to conduct the case. [p. 891, col. 2.]

Obiter.—Apart from the written authority pointed out above, a Counsel appearing in a case from the very nature of his duties and for the purpose of a proper conduct of the case must be deemed to have implied authority to admit or deny a document, to press or withdraw an issue in the case, to examine a witness or call no witnesses and do such other acts which are required for the proper management and conduct of the trial.

Held, that the vakalatnama authorised the Pleader to do all that he considered necessary for the conduct of the case on behalf of his clients. [p. 891, col. 2.]

S. O. A. against the order of the First Civil Judge of Bahraich, dated May 30, 1938.

Mr. B. P. Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal has been filed by defendants-appellants against an order dated May 30, 1938, passed by Mr. Gauri Shankar Varma, First Civil Judge of Bahraich, reversing the judgment and decree of Shaikh Mohammad Ahmad, Munsif, Qaisarganj, district Bahraich, and the operative portion of the order is to the following effect :—

“I set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court and allow the appeal of plaintiff No. 3 with costs. The case will be sent back and retried according to law from the stage where it has been left by the learned Munsif.”

The appellants have described their appeal as a second appeal against the judgment and decree passed by Mr. Gauri Shankar Varma. Obviously, the lower Appellate Court did not pass any decree in the case and so no second appeal is maintainable. The force of this objection was realised by the learned Counsel for the appellants at a very early stage of his arguments and he prayed that the appeal, which is styled as a second civil appeal, may be treated as a miscellaneous appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u) of the Civil P. C. Order XLIII, r. 1 (u) runs as follows :—

(1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders under the provisions of s. 104 namely (u) an order under r. 23 of O. XLI, remanding a case, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court ;”

Order XLI, r. 23 of the Civil P. C., runs as follows :—

“Where an Appellate Court has reversed a decree and all questions arising in the case have not been decided, it may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case, and may further direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the case so remanded, and shall send a copy of its judgment and order to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register of civil suits, and proceed to determine the suits ; and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just executions, be evidence during the trial after remand.”

The question is whether the order passed by the lower Appellate Court falls within the order contemplated by r. 23 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. On the facts of the case, which will be related presently, there is no doubt that the order under appeal is an order of remand contemplated by O. XLI, r. 23 of the Civil P. C. The conditions of r. 1 (u) of O. XLIII of the Civil P. C., are, therefore, satisfied, and I grant leave to the appellants to make the necessary modifications in the memorandum of appeal in the description of the appeal.

The facts of the case are that the three plaintiffs respondents filed a suit for possession of a grove as mortgagees under a deed of mortgage dated the November 29, 1893, executed by one Bishun. The two defendants are the sons of Mst. Patan Dei, defendant No. 3. Bishun died childless and the three defendants are alleged to be the only reversioners of Bishun.

The defendants denied the mortgage and pleaded that it was void on several grounds. They also pleaded that the plaintiffs had never been in possession as mortgagees and that their claim was barred by time.

The trial Court framed the following eight issues:—

(1) Was the mortgage-deed in suit duly executed and attested?

(2) Is the mortgage deed void and ineffective under s. 52 of the T. P. Act?

(3) Was the mortgage deed in suit executed under undue influence and fraud as alleged in para. 11 of the written statement?

(4) Have defendants Nos. 1 to 3 any paramount title in the property in suit as alleged by them? If so, to what effect?

(5) Is the suit barred by limitation?

(6) Was the judgment and decree of the Court passed on the basis of the compromise (Ex. 5) never given effect to as alleged by the defendants? If so, to what effect?

(7) To what reliefs, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?

(8) Is the court-fee paid insufficient?

The plaintiffs finished their oral evidence and closed their evidence, except perhaps for rebuttal, on February 14, 1938. The defendants' evidence was fixed for the same date. They prayed for the examination of the village patwari and other witnesses on some other date. The plaintiffs' Counsel lodged a protest to the effect that the patwari was an important witness and piecemeal examination of oral evidence would result in great prejudice to them. The defendants were allowed to examine the patwari on March 3, 1938. On March 3, 1938, the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 were present in person and the plaintiff No. 3 was absent. Mr. Kaul, who appeared for all the plaintiffs, was present. The defendants' Counsel stated his case and proposed to examine seven witnesses. At that stage a joint application was put in signed by the parties present in Court and by the Counsel of the parties agreeing to withdraw their respective pleas in this case and agreeing further to undertake to abide by the oath of Mst. Patan Dei, defendant No. 3, in accordance with the terms contained in the application. The application was verified by the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in person. March 5, 1938, was fixed for the special oath by Mst. Patan Dei. On March 5, 1938 Mr. T. Kaul with plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3 appeared and expressed his desire to resile from the offer of special oath on behalf of the plaintiff No. 3. This application was vehemently opposed by the defendants. The learned Munsif dismissed this application by a well-considered judgment dated March 5 1938. The order of the learned Munsif I must say discloses a firm grasp of the points of law involved in the decision of the application on behalf of the plaintiff No. 3 and is a well considered order. He rejected the application of plaintiff No. 3 to be permitted to resile from the offer. As a result, the oath was taken and the plaintiffs' suit in accordance with the oath taken was dismissed with costs.

This decree of the learned Munsif was reversed on appeal. Here I may advert to state that the suit had been disposed of by the trial Court on a preliminary point and that decree was reversed in appeal. The order of remand by the lower Appellate Court for a decision of the case on merits falls under an order of remand described in O. XLI, r. 23 of the Civil P. C., and such an order is appealable under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u) of the Civil P. C., as I have stated above.

Against the order of remand passed by the lower Appellate Court the defendants have come up in appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellants challenges the order passed by the Court below that the learned Judge has relied in support of his view on cases which have absolutely no application to the case and that he has ignored entirely the provisions of ss. 8 and 9 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873). It is further contended that the learned Judge has omitted from consideration cases decided by this Court which are fully applicable to the case.

The contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants is that the word "party" in ss. 8 and 9 of the Indian Oaths Act covers "duly acknowledged agents of a party" also. From the judgment of the Court below it appears that these sections were not taken into consideration at all. I have heard the learned Counsel for the parties at considerable length and a large number of cases have been cited before me. The argument in the case has proceeded mainly upon the interpretation to be placed upon the words "any party to any judicial proceeding" in s. 9. It was further argued that a Counsel engaged to conduct the case on behalf of a party to the case has a general power to do such acts as he thinks are essential for the proper conduct of the case and that the Court below should have held in agreement with the trial Court that the act of Mr. Kaul agreeing to abide by the special oath of a person was binding upon his client, i. e., the plaintiff No. 3. Sections 8 and 9 of the Indian Oaths Act may be reproduced here :—

"8. If any party to, or witness in, any judicial proceeding offers to give evidence on oath or solemn affirmation in any form common amongst or held binding by, persons of the race, or persuasion to which he belongs, and not repugnant to justice or decency, and not purporting to affect any third person, the Court may, if it thinks fit, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, tender such oath or affirmation to him.

If any party to any judicial proceeding offers to be bound by any such oath or solemn affirmation as is mentioned in s. 8, if such oath or affirmation is made by the other party to, or by any witness in, such proceeding the Court may, if it thinks fit, ask such party or witness, or cause him to be asked, whether or not he will make the oath or affirmation :

Provided that no party or witness shall be compelled to attend personally in Court solely for the purpose of answering such question."

In s. 9 reproduced above the expression "any party to any judicial proceeding" must be interpreted as including the Counsel representing him in the case. I may on this point cite a few cases decided by this Court :—

Amir v. Mohammad Bakhsh (5 O. W. N. 1070) (1). In this case it was held that the word "party" in s. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873) includes a duly authorised representative and a duly authorised Pleader is entitled to make an offer on behalf of his client to be bound by an oath. In this case an earlier case of Bombay High Court in Sadashiv Rayaji v. Maruti Vithal, I. L. R. 14 Bombay, 455 (2) was dissented from. It would appear from the report that the Counsel who had agreed to abide by special oath of another party had a vakalatnama in his favour, of which the terms are embodied in this judgment. The vakalatnama gave the Counsel authority to file compromises and confessions of judgment on their clients' behalf. It gave authority to the Counsel to submit the dispute to arbitration and ended up with the following words :

"We accept all acts done and everything executed by our Pleader and approve of them. They will be considered as done by ourselves."

On the language of this vakalatnama as quoted above, it was held that the powers given by it to the Pleader were very wide and general, and if the Pleader made an offer on behalf of his client to be bound by an oath, the offer was binding on the client.

The next case is Jasoda v. Gopal, (8 Oudh Weekly Notes, 880) (3). In this case the former case, i. e., 5 Oudh Weekly Notes, p. 1070 (1), has been followed.

I have had a translation of the vakalatnama of Mr. Triloki Nath Kaul prepared by the office and it has been put on the record. The relevant portion in question is as follows :—

"..... do hereby agree that whatever replies and defence, filing of plaint or written statements, under their signatures, or filing of an application for execution of decree, or obtaining copies for inspection, in short filing of applications of every description under their signatures, on our behalf, or filing of any document or getting it back, or receiving of decretal amounts on our behalf, under a receipt signed by them, or filing of appeal under their signatures to a competent Court and doing pairvi in it, or appointing any other Counsel on a further fee through a vakalatnama, under their signature, or through a memorandum for conducting the suit, all that we the declarants, accept and will admit as if done by us personally."

From the above it appears that the persons who gave this vakalatnama agreed to abide by whatever application was made over the signature of the Counsel. They further bound themselves by the replies and defence, filing of plaint and written statements under the signature of the Counsel as on their behalf. In my opinion this vakalatnama authorised Mr. Kaul to do all that he considered necessary for the conduct of the case on behalf of his clients.

I entertain the opinion that if a Pleader is authorised by the vakalatnama in his favour to do all proper pairvi in the case and to represent his client in a litigation and to present all sorts of applications which may become necessary, even though no express power to compromise the case on his behalf may have been conferred upon the Pleader, still the Pleader being a duly authorised person to represent the client would be fully entitled to bind the client by offering to abide by the special oath of the opposite party. For the purposes of s. 9 all that is necessary is that the Pleader or the agent should be considered a duly authorised agent on behalf of his party to conduct the case.

Apart from the written authority pointed out above, it has been held in several cases that a Counsel appearing in a case from the very nature of his duties and for the purpose of a proper conduct of the case must be deemed to have implied authority to admit or deny a document, to press or withdraw an issue in the case, to examine a witness or call no witnesses and do such other acts, which are required for the proper management and conduct of the trial.

The learned Munsif after describing the circumstances of the present case came to the conclusion that on the facts of the case Mr. Kaul must have thought that abiding by the special oath of Mst. Patan Dei was the best act to do on behalf of his clients. I have no hesitation therefore, in holding that for the purposes of s. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act, if the offer is made by a Counsel on behalf of a party, it is not necessary that the Counsel should be specifically authorised to make such an offer or, to compromise the case generally. It is enough if he has been duly authorised to conduct the case generally on behalf of his client. The action of such a Counsel in whose favour no such authority to make an offer exists may further be upheld on the ground that he has such an implied power. On the view expressed above I must hold that the offer made by Mr. Kaul, Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff No. 3, was a good offer and binding on the plaintiff No. 3. In this view it is not necessary to consider other points that were argued by the learned Counsel for the parties, but as a large number of cases were cited during arguments I would like to express my views as regards them.

The Court below has relied upon Tumman Singh v. Sheodardshan Singh, (A. I. R. 1930, Allahabad, p. 162) (4) and Rup Singh Nayal v. Mrs. Arjun Sen, (A. I. R. 1935 Allahabad, 276) (5). In both these cases the question that is involved in the decision of the present appeal was not decided. The only point that was considered was whether it was open to the offerer of special oath to resile from his offer or not. The case-law on the point is not one sided. There are some cases in which it has been held that if an offerer resiles before an oath is actually taken, then he can do so without assigning any reason for doing that. In other cases it has been held that an offerer cannot resile except for good reasons. The two cases mentioned above discuss the same question, and the point which was raised in Amir v. Muhamad Baksh, (5 O. W. N. 1070) (1), was not considered by the above Allahabad cases. In the Allahabad High Court the decision in Wasi-us-Zaman Khan v. Faiza Bibi, (I. L. R. 38 Allahabad, 131) (6), is quite parallel to the cases of this Court, e. g., (5 O. W. N. 1070) (1) and (8 O. W. N. 880) (3). These cases were considered in a recent case of the Madras High Court in Valli Ammal v. Arunachala Moopanar (A. I. R. 1938 Madras, 385) (7), and the ground of distinction, which I have pointed out above, was very clearly noted.

Jadu Sahu v. Chamra Sahu, (A. I. R. 1939 Patna, 222) (8), is the most recent case on the point. In this case it was held that where in a suit an application is filed on behalf of the defendants to the effect that if the plaintiff takes special oath and makes a statement regarding certain items of property claimed by the defendants, the same would be binding on the defendants and such an application is signed by some of the defendants and also by the Pleader appearing on behalf of all the defendants, and the Pleader adds the words "for the defendants" after his signature, any statement made by the plaintiff in pursuance of the application would be binding even on the defendants who may not have signed the application because in the absence of any qualifying words that the Pleader is signing only on behalf of the defendants who have signed, the Pleader will be deemed to have signed on behalf of all the defendants for whom he is appearing.

One strong comment against the application of Amir v. Mohammad Baksh, (5 O. W. N. 1070) (1) and Jasoda v. Gopal (8 O. W. N. 880) (3), and Jadu Sahu v. Chamra Sahu, (A. I. R. 1939 Patna, 222) (8), to the facts of the present case, made by the learned Counsel for the respondent, is that in all these cases the Counsel had an express authority to compromise the case, while in the case before me no such power was given, and on the other hand, the powers of the Counsel in the present case were limited. I have reproduced the vakalatnama in the present case above, and my reading of the vakalatnama is that the Counsel was given very wide powers and he could do many more acts on behalf of his clients than merely compromising the case. The power to file any kind of application by his signature on behalf of his clients is a power of very wide scope, and I am of opinion that the scheme of the vakalat-nama in the present case conferred upon Mr. Kaul wide powers including the power to offer to abide by the special oath.

In Wasi-us-Zaman Khan v. Faiza Bibi, (I. L. R. 38 Allahabad, 131) (6), a lady had authorised her husband to compromise or withdraw the suit, to refer it to arbitration and to nominate arbitrators and finally the plaintiff said that every step that he might take in the conduct of the case was to be considered as having been taken by herself. It was held that the husband had power to take action under ss. 8, 9 and 10 of the Indian Oaths Act.

Disagreeing with the view of the lower Appellate Court, I hold that the decision given by the trial Court was quite correct. The result is that the appeal is allowed and the order passed by the Court below is set aside and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed, with costs throughout.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 26 (2), 66 (3), (2) (6)—Business transferred being agency business, whether excludes application of s. 26 — Assessee firm held could be taxed as successor — Costs payable by assessee, whether should be paid from or limited to Rs. 100 deposited under s. 66 (2)—Discretion of Court in the matter.

The facts that the business transferred is an agency business cannot, always be decisive to exclude the application of s. 26, Income Tax Act, because many businesses sell as agents the goods of others.

A certain motor company terminated in December 1930 an agency for sale of its cars given by it to another firm A, and gave it to the assessee firm from January 1931. On January 22, 1931, A sold to the assessee all its business as a going concern and the assessee firm took charge of the business and buildings as a going concern as its vendor went out. There was thus continuity and identity:

Held, that the assessee firm could be taxed as a successor of firm A within the meaning of s. 26 (2) of the Income Tax Act.

[Case-law relied on.]

Under s. 66 (6), Income Tax Act, costs are in Court's discretion. The deposit is returnable under proviso 2 to s. 66 (2) in certain circumstances. There is however no provision in the Act that costs payable by an assessee should be paid from or limited to the Rs. 100 deposited under s. 66 (2). Rupees 100 in s. 66 (2) is referred to as a fee.

Ref. made by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Aden, dated February 4, 1937.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Applicant.

Mr. Srikishindas H. Lulla, for the Opponents.

Davis, J. C.—This is a statement of a case to this Court in its High Court jurisdiction under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act, by the Commissioner of Income-tax for Bombay and Sind in the matter of the assessment for the financial year 1931-32, of the assessee, Messrs. Naraindas & Co., Ltd. The question of law arising is:

"Whether in the circumstances of the case, the assessee company has been correctly taxed as successor to the Auto Car Sales Company of Jullunder within the meaning of s. 26 (2), Income Tax Act, 1922."

The learned Commissioner has assisted us with his opinion that the question should be answered in the affirmative. Now, the facts of the case are that the assessee company was the agent for General Motors (India) Ltd., in the Lahore area for the sale of its cars, and took over from a firm called the Auto Car Sales Company, the agency for General Motors (India) Ltd., which the Auto Car Sales Company held in the Jullunder, Ludhiana and Hoshiarpur areas. General Motors terminated Auto Car Sales' contract in December 1930, and granted the agency to the assessee company in January 1931. So far, it might be said there was no succession by the assessee company to Auto Car Sales within the meaning of s. 26 (2), Income Tax Act, and the ruling of this Court in Tolaram Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden (1). All that happened was that Auto Car Sales ceased to be the agents for General Motors for a particular area and the assessee company became the agents of General Motors for that area. Auto Car Sales did not sell their business to the assessee company. General Motors merely transferred their agency from the one to the other. The business of Auto Car Sales merely ceased to exist or was carried on elsewhere. But this interpretation of the case leaves out of account the fact that by a deed dated January 22, 1931 Auto Car Sales sold to the assessee company for the sum of one lac and sixty five thousand rupees what can only be described as their business. This is a large sum of money, and obviously would not be given except for something of value. What that is, is set out in the deed in the following terms :

".... in consideration of the sale price of our all and single rights and ownership, lease-holders, agreement, goodwills, franchisees, contracts, assets, stocks-in-trade, accessories, spare parts, tyres, oil, petrol, furniture, fixtures, tools and machinery, new motor vehicles, about 30 second hand vehicles, building material of our Jullunder and Hoshiarpur buildings along with the lessee's rights and benefits pertaining to both these buildings debts due to us or our joint firm from third persons including bills for collection, petrol bills loans and pronotes, hire purchase account and outstandings at our Hoshiarpur Branch. And these have already been sold and transferred and possession delivered by us to the said Messrs. Naraindas & Co., Ltd.

All the account books, cash books, day books, ledgers, stock-books, agreements, correspondence, pronotes, hundis, and all other documents relating to the abovesaid items of sale have ere now been handed over to them with powers and rights to deal with these items and realize them as rightful transferor from us. The lists of all the debts due to us and other articles delivered have also been handed over duly signed by us."

It is true that the deed is dated January 22, 1931, and the agency terminated on January 1, 1931, but that interval of time is too short to matter. It is also clear from the very words of the deed that there was here something more than a mere transfer of an agency from one firm to another at the volition of a third party. All the essentials of the business as a going concern were sold. The fact that the vendors held themselves liable for the due payment of debts they owed to others, appears to us in no way sufficient to alter the essential nature of the transaction which was the transference of a business as a going concern from one firm to another, their successors.

Mr. Lulla for the assessee contends that there was not here the sale of a business but the sale of the assets of a business, and that the case of this Court in Tolaram Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden (1) completely covers this case. But that case must be kept to its own particular facts. The facts that the business transferred is an agency business cannot, in our opinion, always be decisive to exclude the application of s. 26, Income Tax Act, because many businesses sell as agents the goods of others. It is a matter of common knowledge that famous makes of cars have as their selling agents certain firms who have the right to sell these special makes and the duty not to sell others; and most businessmen would, we think, be of the opinion that the advantage in business of this kind is not all on one side, the side of the makers of the cars, for as good agents want good makes of cars, so makers of good cars want good agents.

One agent may by his skill, energy and enterprise build up a big business on the sale of a particular maker's car another agent in the same district with the same opportunities may fail. We do not think therefore that it can be said that in the transfer of an agency business the goodwill of the transferors must necessarily amount to nothing, that the name of the principal is everything. But where one firm merely gives up an agency which is given to another, and the matter there ends, there is of course no question of the successor to a business within the meaning of s. 26 (2) and this is, we think, how the case of pfaff's machines was regarded in Tolaram Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax Bombay Presidency and Aden (1). That case was regarded as a case wherein the agency was taken from one firm and given to another. In this case however the agency rights of General Motors are not specifically mentioned in the deed and are not expressly sold by Auto Car Sales as they could not sell what was not theirs. The word "franchisees" may or may not be taken to include these rights, but we think it matters not. That is but one item in the sale by Auto Car Sales. What is sold is a business in motor cars as a going concern. The buildings and the lessees' rights were sold with goodwill, contracts, assets, stock-in-trade, spare parts, tyres, new and second hand vehicle, accounts, bills, pronotes, hire purchase, accounts and outstandings. In short, all that of which a business of this kind could be reasonably said to exist, was sold and the assessee company went into the buildings and took charge of the business as a going concern as Auto Car Sales went out. There was continuity and identity. This question of succession is dealt with by Rowlatt, J., in an oft-quoted passage in Shipstone v. Morris (2), and is referred to in a comparatively recent case by Finlay, J., in Wild v. Madame Tusaud's (3), where part of Rowlat, J.'s judgment in another case, Ogston v. Reynolds (4) at pp. 523-524, is cited in the following passage :

"In this case I am of opinion that I cannot interfere with the decision of the Commissioners. I should like again to advert to the consideration which I drew attention to in Shipstone v. Morris (2), namely that this provision as regards successors is designed merely with a view to preserve in a proper case where there is a succession a measure upon which the successor may be assessed in the first year of his proprietorship of the business, and that, as I pointed out, is at the root of the necessity for there being a real continuity of the business. You want to measure the income of the successor by the past history of the business; it is therefore essential that there should be a very close identity between the business in the former proprietorship and the business in the present proprietorship. Now, in the present case what troubled me at first was that the Commissioners in deciding the case, being of course primarily a question of fact, have stated that they hold that the company did not purchase a business formerly carried on, but only certain assets. Now, if that had meant that because they did not purchase all the assets, therefore there was no succession, I think that would be wrong in law. It is not easy to believe that the Commissioners should think that or say it. I do not think that is what they have done. What they say is: They did not purchase the business; it is true that they purchased some of the assets; but that is all they did. That is what I think the Commissioners intended. Now, is that a view to which they could properly come? That went to the Court of Appeal: the Master of the Rolls discusses the matter and he says quite definitely that, in his view, it is a question of fact for the decision of the Commissioners. Greer, L.J. gives a judgment to which I will refer, because the Solicitor-General quite naturally placed much reliance on it. He said: 'I think the question of succession involves, or may involve, the question as to whether there has been a long enough gap between the former business and the business which is supposed to have succeeded to it. It might well be that if there was a bankruptcy and within a week the whole of the assets were sold to the new firm, and the new firm then started to carry it on, that would not be a sufficient gap to prevent a succession happening. But, on the other hand, it might well be that in another case the bankruptcy continued for 12 months before the sale took place, and I should think if the gap was as long as 12 months then it would be quite certain that it could not be regarded as a succession in the hands of the purchaser of the assets even if it were a purchase of the whole of the assets. For intermediate periods of time the question must be a question of fact.'

That passage, I think, answers Mr. Lulla's argument that there was here only a sale of some assets of the business and not a succession and that the gap of 21 days between the transfer of the agency on January 1, and the execution of the said deed on January 22, 1931 destroyed that continuity and identity in the business which is necessary if there is to be a succession within the meaning of s. 26 (2), Income Tax Act. In fact, it would appear from the deed itself that on January 22, 1931 possession had been already given but though transfer of the agency was undoubtedly the cause of the transfer of the business, we hold that there was here a business, as part from or including the agency it matters not, which was succeeded to. The date of January 1, 1931 does not therefore finally conclude the case in the assessee company's favour.

We have been referred to two other cases, Kanniappa Nicker & Co. v. Commissioner of Income tax, Madras (5) and Maharaja-dhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax (6), but neither of these cases in our opinion assists the assessee. We think therefore the question raised must be answered in the affirmative. Lastly, Mr. Lulla asks that we should make an order that the costs be limited to the Rs. 100 deposited as the assessee was bound to deposit it under s. 66 (2) of the Act. Under s. 66 (6), Income Tax Act, costs are in our discretion. The deposit is returnable under proviso 2 to s. 66 (2) in certain circumstances. There is however no provision in the Act that costs payable by an assessee should be paid from or limited to that sum. Rupees 100 in s. 65 (2) is referred to as a fee. The question of costs in proceedings of this nature is to be fully argued in another case and the assessee may have liberty to apply to the Court hereafter for an order giving directions as to costs. We therefore now make no order as to costs which order we will make hereafter.

D. Answered in affirmative.

JUDGMENT-DEBTEE—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 39, 47—Transferee Court contemplated by s. 39—Objection to ex parte order, if can be raised under s. 47—Order overruling such objection—Appealability.

There is no express provision in s. 39, cl. (4) Civil P. O., that the transferee Court may be a Court of any pecuniary jurisdiction. The transferee Court contemplated by s. 39 must be therefore a Court of competent jurisdiction, that is, a Court which has the same pecuniary jurisdiction as the transferor Court. Durga Charan Mojumdar v. Umatara Gupta (1) and 6 Ind. Cas. 97 (2), relied on.

A judgment-debtor can raise an objection to the ex parte order of transfer under s. 47, Civil P. O. This objection is an objection relating to the execution of the decree as it is an objection relating to the first step in execution. An order overruling such an objection is one under s. 47 and is appealable. The Appellate Court has therefore to set aside the order.

A. from appellate order of the District Judge, Assam Valley District, dated June 21, 1939.

Messrs. Gopendra Nath Das and Indir Chandra Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Binayak Nath Banerjee, for the Respondent.

Nasim Ali, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated June 21, 1939, reversing an order of the Special Subordinate Judge of the same district made on March 23, 1939. The appellant obtained a money decree against the respondent in the Court of the Special Subordinate Judge on March 19, 1927. He applied for transfer of this decree for execution to the Presidency Small Cause Court, Calcutta, on February 9, 1939. On February 10, 1939, the Subordinate Judge issued the necessary certificate of non-satisfaction of decree to the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, for execution and transferred the decree to that Court without giving any notice to the judgment-debtor. Thereafter the Small Cause Court arrested the judgment-debtor in execution of the decree. On March 23, 1939, the judgment-debtor made an application before the Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts, who made the order for transfer for recalling the said order. The learned Subordinate Judge refused this prayer of the judgment-debtor. The latter thereupon appealed to the District Judge. The learned District Judge allowed the appeal and recalled the order of transfer made by the Subordinate Judge. Hence this appeal to this Court.

The first point urged by Mr. Das in support of this appeal is that the learned District Judge was wrong in recalling the order inasmuch as the order was good in law though it was made ex parte. The learned District Judge has found that the order of transfer was bad in law inasmuch as the decree was above Rs. 2,000 and the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, has no power to execute decrees exceeding Rs. 2,000. Mr. Das' contention is that the view taken by the learned District Judge is wrong inasmuch as there is no limitation as regards the pecuniary jurisdiction in cases coming under s. 39, cl. (i), Civil P. C. His argument is that cl. (ii) of the said Section expressly refers to the jurisdiction of the Court, but cl. (i) does not mention anything about the competency of the Court. The opening words of cl. (i) of s. 39 are in these terms:

"The Court which passed [a] decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court."

It was argued by Mr. Das that the expression "another Court" includes Court of any jurisdiction, viz., that of a Munsif or a Subordinate Judge and consequently a decree passed by a Subordinate Judge can be transferred for execution to the Court of a Munsif. I am unable to accept this contention. Section 6 of the Code runs thus:

"Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject-matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction."

There is no express provision in s. 39, cl. (i) that the transferee Court may be a Court of any pecuniary jurisdiction. The transferee Court contemplated by s. 39 must be therefore a Court of competent jurisdiction, that is, a Court which has the same pecuniary jurisdiction as the transferor Court. This view is supported by the decision in Durga Charan Mojumdar v. Umatar Gupta (1), and Sham Sundar Saha v. Anath Bandhu Saha (2). The learned District Judge was therefore right in holding that the order of the Subordinate Judge transferring the decree for execution to the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, was bad in law.

Mr. Das next contended that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to set aside an order made by the Subordinate Judge rejecting the judgment-debtor's objection to the order of transfer. It was argued by him that the order of transfer, though it was ex parte, being an order under s. 47 of the Code was appealable and as that appeal was barred by time, the judgment-debtor was precluded from questioning the validity of the said order by another petition under s. 47, Civil P. C. I am unable to accept this view. The order for transfer was made ex parte. The judgment-debtor no doubt did not appeal against that order in time. There is nothing in the law which precludes him from raising his objection to the said ex parte order, under s. 47 of the Code. This he did. This objection is an objection relating to the execution of the decree as it is an objection relating to the first step in execution. His objection was overruled by the Subordinate Judge. The order of the Subordinate Judge therefore was an order under s. 47 and was consequently appealable to the District Judge. The District Judge had therefore jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge. The points taken by the learned Advocate for the appellant fail and this appeal is accordingly dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Narsing Rau, J.—I agree.

s. Appeal dismissed.

Administration—Surety—When entitled to be discharged—Executor adjudged insolvent—Surety, if can be released.

The surety is entitled to protection against the executor if it be shown that the latter is wasting the estate, and thereby rendering the former liable on his surety bond. The course to be adopted, on waste by the executor, being established by the surety, is to call on the executor to furnish other security, and, on his doing so, to discharge the original surety in respect of future waste. Should the executor fail to furnish other security the probate should be revoked and the surety discharged.

Where therefore the executor by being adjudged insolvent has demonstrated that he is unable to manage his own affairs it is reasonable for the surety to believe that he is not a fit person to manage an estate of somebody else and he is entitled to be released from his surety bond. *SHI RAM v. Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Fact of contract itself disputed—Arbitrators, if can decide that point—Court, if can grant stay.

As the Arbitration Act requires a submission in writing, the fact that a contract or submission in writing exists is to be established by the person who comes to Court and applies for a stay. On the assumption that a contract which contains a submission in writing exists, an application may be made because on that assumption the arbitrators have jurisdiction. Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), s. 94—S. 94, interpretation.

Section 94 cannot be interpreted to mean that all the sums realizable as arrears of land revenue must be recovered under the provision of Chap. V, Section 94, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation should be read as subject to s. 154 by which the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is expressly excluded in connection with certain matters only. If a process were issued under Chap. V for the recovery of a sum realizable as land revenue the provisions of Chap. V would automatically apply by virtue of s. 94, but if the party entitled to recover such a sum instituted a suit in a Civil Court for this purpose there is nothing in the Regulation to prevent the party from doing so. *RAGHUBIR SINGH CHETRI v. —ss. 154 (1) (g), 94—Claim of Local Board for recovery of money arising from breach of lease, and not connected with process issued under Chap. V—Suit in Civil Court, if competent.

The expression "process" obviously has a technical meaning under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and refers to the various processes for the recovery of arrears of land revenue which are mentioned in Chap. V of the Regulation, and the methods which may be adopted in this connection are actually described as "processes" in s. 91 of the Regulation.

Where the claim of the Local Board arises directly from a breach of the conditions of the defendant's lease and is not connected with the processes issued under Chap. V, there is nothing in the Regulation to debar the Board from instituting a suit in Civil Court for the recovery of the money due to them. The mere fact that the Board once resorted to the revenue authorities for the recovery of their dues, does not debar them from recovering any portion of the money due to them in a Civil Court. *RAGHUBIR SINGH CHETRI v. Bengal Cess Act (IX of 1880), s. 45—Decision by Revenue Court that cess was recoverable and claim made for its recovery was within limitation—Decision, if can be set aside by Civil Court.

The cess which is payable under the Act may be recovered either under the Public Demands Recovery Act or by a suit. The question whether cess was recoverable in a case under s. 45 of the Act is one to be decided by the Revenue Court which issued the certificate, and if that Court has decided rightly or wrongly that the cess was recoverable and the claim made for the recovery was not barred by limitation, a suit cannot be entertained in a Civil Court to set aside that decision. A Civil Court can entertain a suit only if the order of the Revenue Court is without jurisdiction and not because the decision pronounced by the Court is not correct. *MANGTU LAL BAGARIA v. A Civil Court cannot enquire into the question whether Collector has apportioned costs on land not liable to be charged. The apportionment of costs by Collector on lands which he should not have done under the provisions of the Ben. Embank. Act is at the most an erroneous decision or an irregular exercise of the jurisdiction which the Collector undoubtedly possesses and in no sense it can be said to be a usurpation of jurisdiction by the Collector which would make the order a nullity or without jurisdiction. It is open to the party aggrieved to take an appeal against that order to the Commissioner as provided for in s. 84 or to invoke the powers vested in the Commissioner and the Govt. as provided for in s. 85 of the Act. *JADUNATH BANERJEE v. Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 14 SEE Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, s. 33

s. 14—Sale under s. 14, when effected.

It cannot be said that a sale under s. 14 is really made by the Collector after the period of ten days has expired, and after all the moneys are put in. The sale as is effected by the first payment of the entire arrears. If there are no materials, upon which the Collector can find as to whether one payment is earlier than the other, the obvious course would be to regard these payments as simultaneous, and declare both of them as to be joint purchasers. *KAMAL KRISHNA MANDAL v. s. 33—'Sale' in s. 33.

The word 'sale' is used rather loosely in the Act. 'Sale' must necessarily include the whole procedure from issue of notices under ss. 5 and 6 up till the final completion of the 'sale' in its narrower sense as the corollary to 'purchase'. A 'sale' is conducted contrary to the provisions of the Act within the meaning of s. 33 if there is any defect in any of these proceedings, not merely for defect at the time of actual auction. *KAMAL KRISHNA MANDAL v. As soon as the full amount of arrears is paid by one sharer, the offer made by the Collector must be deemed to be accepted, and the purchase becomes complete. That the subsequent payments were also made by recorded sharers within ten days cannot affect the position. KAMAL KRISHNA MANDAL v. HEMENDRA KRISHNA SINGHA Cal. 286 ss. 33, 14, 34—S. 33, applicability to sale under s. 14—Suit by co-sharer for declaration of his preferential title and that sale should stand entirely in his favour, if falls within s. 33.

Section 33, Peng. Land Rev. Sales Act is not confined to sales by public auction under the Act, but also applies to a sale under s. 14 of the Act. But in order to attract the operation of s. 33 the suit must be one to annul the sale and this presupposes that the party suing is the defaulting co-sharer or any other person who derives his title from him. Where the plaintiff co-sharer impeaches the rights of other co-sharers to become purchasers by reason of the subsequent deposits they made, but wants at the same time that the sale should stand and stand entirely in his favour, it is really a suit by one purchaser against another for a declaration that he has a preferential title and does not fall within s. 33 and would lie in a Civil Court, quite apart from s. 33 for having a declaration that the plaintiff is the sole purchaser, and no title was vested in any of the other co-sharers by reason of the payments they made under s. 14. *KAMAL KRISHNA MANDAL v. The auction-purchaser is entitled to eject all under-tenants who hold their land entirely within his estate but he is not entitled by this section to eject an under-tenant who holds an under-tenure partly within his estate and partly within other estates. Where, therefore, the tenures are held by the defendants not only under the touzi purchased at a revenue sale by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff but also under other touzies, these tenures cannot be annulled in part and, therefore, the plaintiff — s. 37—Revenue sale—Suit to recover possession on basis of such sale—Onus lies on plaintiff to prove that land lies within his regularly assessed estate.

In a case in which the plaintiff is seeking to recover possession of property on the basis of a revenue sale the initial onus must lie on the plaintiff to show that the land lies within his regularly assessed estate or mahal and not merely that it lies within the ambit of his zemindari. Even if he has succeeded in discharging this onus the entry in the Record of Rights in favour of the defendants has the effect of throwing the onus back on the plaintiff in order to prove that the land did not appertain to a niskar tenure. Once the plaintiff has discharged the initial onus which lies upon him in a matter of this sort it would be for the defendant to prove that his case would fall within one of the exceptions to s. 37 of Ben. Revenue Sales Act. ASHAMAYI BASU v. BARANAGORE JUTE FACTORY Co., LTD. Cal. 535

— s. 37—Suit to annul tenure — Defendant pleading niskar grant made prior to Permanent Settlement—Proof of long possession without payment of rent, nature of.

It is true that in a case for the assessment of rent evidence of long possession without payment of rent might in certain circumstances lead to an inference that a former proprietor of the estate had created a rent free title in respect of the land in suit. But even in such a case it would be essential that such evidence should be of a definite character and cover a sufficiently long period to allow such an inference to be drawn. In a case in which it is sought to annul a tenure under s. 37 of the revenue sale law a fortiori the proof of long possession without payment of rent must be of a very definite and convincing nature such as would be sufficient to enable the Court to draw the inference that the niskar grant in respect of the tenure had been made prior to the Permanent Settlement. ASHAMAYI BASU v. Bengal Municipal Act (XV of 1932), ss. 2, proviso, 133—Assessment without preparing valuation list under new Act, validity—S. 2, Proviso, applicability—Valuation and assessment made under old Act, if kept alive by proviso.

There is no precise correspondence between the fee under the old Ben. Municipal Act and conservancy rate under the new Act. The name and the incidence are different; and it is, therefore, not possible to apply to them the language of the proviso to s. 2 of the new Act. Where the old and the new imposts correspond, the proviso obviously applies, but it is not possible to apply it in cases where there is no correspondence. A valuation list prepared under the old Act is not a valid valuation list made under the new Act.

Where property is for the first time sought to be assessed to the conservancy rate without a valid valuation list, under s. 133, Ben. Municipal Act the resulting assessment is ultra vires. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER, DACOA v. GANGAMANI CHAUDHURANI Cal. 605 themselves—It is mere correction of misdescription under O. I., r. 10, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—S. 22, Limitation Act (IX of 1908), does not apply.

The name is not always the true criterion for determining the party really sued. The Court has to consider the nature of the allegations in the plaint and the nature of the relief sought.

Where a suit for declaration that the assessment is ultra vires and illegal, intended to be brought against the Corporation is through mistake instituted against the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners instead of against the Municipal Commissioners themselves as required by s. 15, Ben. Municipal Act a subsequent amendment impleading the Municipal Commissioners themselves is merely a correction of misdescription under O. I., r. 10, Civil P. C., and not an addition of a new party within the meaning of s. 22, Lim. Act. An order merely directing the addition as parties of certain persons, whose names were not specified in the order, nor added in the certificate, cannot make these persons certificate-debtors within the meaning of s. 3 (1), Ben. — s. 20—Representation — Applicability to sale in certificate proceeding—S. 146-A, Bengal Tenancy Act, if applies to such proceeding.

Section 146-A, Ben. Ten. Act does not in terms apply to certificate proceedings. Certificate proceedings are governed by s. 20, Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act. The words "where the holding is sold in execution of a certificate" in s. 20 (1) mean "where the interests of all the tenants of a holding are bound by the sale and sold in execution of a certificate." The principle of representation recognized in respect of rent decrees would also apply in the case of sales in execution of certificates. When the amendment to Ben. Ten. Act was made by the insertion of s. 146-A, by which in the case of sales by execution of decrees it was provided that in certain circumstances the interests of certain persons not actually parties to the suit might be affected, it does not follow that this applied also to certificate sales in so far as any change was made from the law as it stood at the time when the Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act itself was passed in 1913. BAJROGA KHATUN v. PROVINCE OF BENGAL Cal. 301

Order passed by Revenue Officer under s. 26-G, if can be revised under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

Section 26-G, Ben. Ten. Act, empowers a Court as well as a Revenue Officer to entertain applications. A Revenue Officer on the plain language of the statute is not therefore a Court. He is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. The mere fact that his order might have the effect of a decree of Civil Court does not make him a Court, far less a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. O. His order cannot therefore be revised. SARAT CHANDRA CHAKRABURTY v. SASHI BRUSAN MANNA Cal. 14

The right of appeal is the creation of the statute and should not be inferred from analogy or deduced by implication. The words "shall have the effect of a decree" in Ben. Ten. Act do not provide for an appeal. Section 26-G (5) of the Act does not take away the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. It is optional with the mortgagor to make an application under the section and it is optional with the Court to make an order. No appeal, therefore, lies from an order passed on an application under s. 26-G (5). ACHINTA NATH SASMAL v. GOBINDA PRASAD DAS Cal. 530

A dispute regarding a right of way which provided access to certain survey number was enquired into by the Tahsildar who was empowered to do so by Govt. The plaintiffs thereon preferred an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner which was heard by the Sub-Divisional Officer, who decided it on March 14, 1934. An appeal to the Commissioner was decided on June 13, 1934, and a revision application made to the Local Govt. was decided on December 12, 1934. The decision having been given against the plaintiffs they filed a suit on March 11, 1935, in terms of s. 129 (3) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928:

Held, that although the Tahsildar exercised the powers under the Berar Land Revenue Code under s. 129 his decisions did not have the force of the decisions of the Deputy Commissioner. — s. 11.—Certificate to question validity of s. 11 granted—New Act of 1939 coming into force—Question becoming not existent—Federal Court, if can still entertain appeal.

When jurisdiction to hear an appeal is once vested in the Federal Court by the grant of a certificate, it cannot be divested by any subsequent event. A certificate is the key which unlocks the door into Federal Court, and a litigant who has once passed through that door cannot afterwards be ejected by the happening of events outside and beyond his control. It is quite immaterial that the relief which the appellants claim arises from an Act which was not law when the certificate was granted. Section 205 (2) is plain; and once a certificate has been granted, an appellant can appeal on any ground whatsoever, if the Court thinks fit to give him leave to do so. Where a certificate was granted on the question of validity of s. 11 of Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, but in the meanwhile the new Act of 1939 came into force, and the question ceased to exist, the certificate does not become "infructuous" and the jurisdiction to hear appeal is not taken away from the Federal Court.

Parliament never contemplated a contingency of the kind; but that is no reason why the Federal Court should not give effect to the plain language of the Act. Nor could it lightly adopt a construction which would have this result, that an appeal properly begun and continued in Federal Court was suddenly, by the action of a Provincial Legislature, taken out of its jurisdiction and transferred to the jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee. *SUBHANAND CHOWDEARY v. — ss. 11, 8, 7.—Duty of Court under s. 11—Parties not appealing with respect to amount decreed by trial Court as principal and interest—Power of Appellate Court to reduce amount.

Section 11, Bihar Money-lenders Act enjoins a duty on the Court, in the class of cases to which it refers to restrict the amount of interest awarded, to a sum not in excess of the principal advanced. The only conditions necessary to attract the operation of that section to an Appellate Court are that there shall be a suit by a money-lender, that the suit shall be in respect of a loan and that the appeal shall arise out of such a suit. When these conditions are satisfied the duty of an Appellate Court is plain that it must give effect to the section. Hence in an appeal even if the parties concerned have not raised a point with respect to the amount decreed by the first Court as principal and Federal Court would reject a request to exercise for the first time a discretion which the High Court could have been, but was not asked to exercise under s. 12 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, (1938), a section which, the High Court has not at any time held to be void, as it has held other sections of the same Act to be. *PIETSWI CHAND LALL CHAUDHARY v. — s. 12.—High Court using discretion—Interference by Federal Court.

The word "may" in the opening portion of s. 12 of Bihar Act VII of 1939 has not the meaning of the word "shall." Obviously by the use of the word "may" it is intended that the Court should consider the circumstances of each case and then decide whether it should or should not exercise all or any of the three powers mentioned in the section. The use of the word "may" indicates that the Court is not bound to exercise at least one of the powers, and may well not exercise any of the powers at all. The language as it stands can mean only this that the Court has the discretion to exercise all or any or none of the specified powers.

When the question is one of a discretion of the High Court under old s. 12, of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, the Federal Court cannot in appeal interfere with the way in which the discretion is exercised or not exercised, unless it appears that the High Court did not apply its mind at all to the question, or acted capriciously or in disregard of any legal principle, or was influenced by some extraneous considerations wrong in law. If there can be no legal objection to the way in which discretion has or has not been exercised by the High Court, then the Federal Court would not in appeal substitute its own discretion for that of the High Court. *JAGOBIND SINGH v. Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 7.—Certificate under old Act—New Act coming into force—Appeal if can be entertained by Federal Court.

Once the door of the Federal Court is opened to the appellant, it cannot be shut against him on the double ground that he can no longer rely on the certificate because the old Bihar Money-lenders law under which the certificate was granted to question the validity of a section of the old Act has been replaced by a new one, and he cannot rely on the new law because to avail himself of the new law he must get the certificate vacated and then go to the Privy Council. If Federal Court is not prepared to consider the old section, because it has been not only repealed but replaced, by a new section then it must consider and apply the latter, unless it can dispose of the appeal on some other shorter ground. As a special case, the Federal Court has also power to grant leave for taking such a ground under s. 205 (2) of the Govt. of India Act, and can also take account of the new Act suo moto. The Federal Court can take cognisance of the new Act, with a view to do justice between the parties, as the new Act has been made retrospective. *SURENDDA PRASAD NARAIN SINGH v. Section 7 of the Act deals with two kinds of loan, a loan advanced and a loan based on a document. Under the second heading it takes into consideration two kinds of documents on which loan may be based, one kind may evidence the loan and the other which may not evidence the loan, but may be utilized to find out the amount mentioned in it. The document in the expression "based on a document" can be used in two different ways, in one case evidencing a loan and in another case simply mentioning a loan. This section cannot be interpreted to contemplate, that the same document may relate to two different amounts. SINGHESHWAR SINGH v. MEDNI PRASAD SINGH Pat. 339

s. 7—Entries in account books showing what items represent principal and what interest—
"Amount of the loan," how arrived.

The account books must be taken as a whole and where the entries therein clearly show what items represent principal and what items interest, the Court must arrive at the "amount of the loan" within the meaning of s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1939, by excluding the items that represent only interest. The scheme of the Bihar Money-lenders Act emphasises the distinction between liability in respect of the principal and liability in respect of the interest and whether a party relies on the words "mentioned in" or on the words "evidence by" at the end of s. 7 of the Act of 1939, the "amount of loan" must be determined with reference to the whole document and not by confining attention to a particular entry. SURENDRA PRASAD SINGH v. s. 7—Expression "evidenced by such document", meaning of.

The meaning of the clause "evidenced by such document" in s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, is that the Court should, in every case, look to the document on which the loan is based in order to find out the loan advanced. If the loan is based upon a single document, then the Court will ascertain from that document what is the amount of loan mentioned in it, always bearing in mind the definition of the word 'loan' which covers an engagement to fulfil a previous obligation; where the loan is evidenced by a series of letters or other documents like *bahit khata*s or based on as evidenced by the handnote which for some purposes may be inadmissible in evidence, nevertheless, a Court must refer to them for the purpose of s. 7 to find out what the loan was in order to apply the rule of Damdupat adopted by Legislature with the limitations provided by the Act. SINGHESHWAR SINGH v. s. 7—Interest pendente lite—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 11.

Rule 11 of O. XXXIV, Civil P. C., which removes any conflict that there might have been between s. 34 and O. XXXIV, rr. 2 and 4, gives a certain amount of discretion to the Court, so far as interest pendente lite and subsequent interest are concerned. It is no longer absolutely obligatory on the Courts to decree interest at the contractual rate up to the date of redemption in all circumstances, if there be no question of the rate being penal, excessive or substantially unfair within the meaning of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918.

or the old standard of high rates of interest, which were freely allowed. It may even be contrary to the spirit of the Bihar Act now to allow compound interest at a high contractual rate not only during the pendency of the suit but even up to six months after the preliminary decree to be passed hereafter. Of course, whether the Court would or would not give relief in respect of interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum, and if so to what extent, will depend on the special circumstances of each case. The opinion of the High Court on such a matter must carry weight, where, being conscious of its discretionary power under s. 8, it has considered the case not to be a fit one for the exercise of such power.

(The pendente lite interest was reduced to 12 per cent. per annum simple). JAI GOBIND SINGH v. LAOHMI NARAIN RAM

s. 7—Scope—Loan advanced on mortgage—
Creditor suing one of executants for separate share having already realized balance from others—
Maximum amount of interest that can be decreed.

Reading s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regu. of Transactions) Act as a whole, it is quite obvious that it deals with a suit brought by a money-lender (against the defendant who is sued) in respect of a loan advanced (to the defendant sued against) in which a decree has to be passed (against the defendant who is sued) the amount of interest allowed prior to the suit not exceeding the amount of the loan advanced (to the defendant sued against) or if the loan (due from the defendant sued against) is based on a document, the amount of the loan (due from the defendant sued against) mentioned in or evidenced by such a document. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature that if there are several executants who have borrowed various sums and the creditor sues one of them for his separate share only, having already realized the balance from the others, then the maximum prescribed for the amount of interest to be decreed against him is not to exceed the aggregate of the various sums borrowed by him as well as all the other pro forma defendants who are not really being sued. The only reasonable interpretation to put on the section is to read it as referring to the claim brought against the particular defendant who is sued, and the amount which is due from him alone and is the subject-matter of the claim. It will be in accord with the intention of the Provincial Legislature as disclosed by the various provisions in the Act for the reduction of interest to interpret the section so as to give relief to the defendants in respect of the interest which they would otherwise be liable to pay.

Where the total amount of loan is Rs. 75,000 but the liability of the defendant is only to the extent of one-sixth of this liability i. e., Rs. 12,500, the interest that would be allowed to the plaintiff against the defendant would not exceed Rs. 12,500. BIRENDRA PRASAD SAKUL v. limited to interest claimable upto the date of the institution of the suit. The Act has maintained a distinction between loans advanced before the Act and loans advanced subsequently. The contract for the payment of interest not having been declared illegal, but only unenforceable beyond a certain point, the creditor retains his contractual rights except to the extent to which the statute has expressly limited them. In these circumstances, it may perhaps be open to doubt whether the policy of the Bihar legislation can properly be taken into account by a Court which is considering whether there are any grounds for reducing the rate of interest to which a mortgagee would ordinarily be entitled under the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 11 of the Code, since this would in effect be to extend the Act to a period with which the Legislature has not chosen to deal; but it may be that the wide powers of re-opening transactions originating before or after the commencement of the Act given to the Court by s. 8 of the Bihar Act of 1939 were regarded by the Legislature as conferring a much wider discretion than that given by O. XXXIV, r. 11 or by the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. SUBHANAND CHOWDHARY v. APURBA KRISHNA MITRA F C 436

In the applicability of s. 26-O, Bihar Ten. Act, a distinction cannot be drawn between pending suits in which the landlord is a plaintiff and pending suits in which the landlord is a defendant. The title of the transferee would not become extinct by the passing of a decree against him unless and until such decree has become final as it might by the lapse of the period of limitation for an appeal and the omission of the defendant to file an appeal against the decree. Therefore, in dispossessing the transferee the dispossession is not really in the capacity of auction-purchaser of his interest, but merely upon the excuse of being an auction-purchaser. This is clearly a case where the special limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III, Bihar Ten. Act is applicable to a suit by the transferee for possession.

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), ss. 3 (13), 50 (2), 90 (5)—Municipality declaring private street as public one—Soil of such street, if belongs to Municipality—Whether can be claimed by person.

From the definition of "public street" in s. 3 (13), Bom. District Municipal Act, it does not follow that the soil of every public street must necessarily be of the ownership of the Municipality. Section 50, sub-s (2) (f), says that all public streets, and the pavements, stones and other materials thereof and also all trees, erections, materials, implements and things provided for such streets shall be vested in and belong to the Municipality, and shall be held and applied by them as trustees. Unless it is definitely proved that the soil of any public street belongs to the Municipality, it cannot be presumed to be of the ownership of the Municipality merely on the ground that it is used as a public street. In fact s. 90, sub-s. (5), contemplates a private street being declared by the Municipality as a public street, but thereby the soil of such street does not come to be of the ownership of the Municipality. The only effect of such a declaration is that the street is allowed to be used by the public, and the public can claim a right of way over it as contemplated by s. 3, sub-s. (13) (a) of the Act. Therefore the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer that certain land was a public street does not declare that the Municipality was the owner of the soil of the street. On failure of a person to file a suit within one year after the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer, he is debarred from challenging the Municipality's claim that the land is a public street; but he is not debarred from claiming that even though it is a public street, the soil of the street belongs to him. CHHOTALAL PANAHAND v. There was an auction sale of night soil manure belonging to a Municipality and one M purchased it for Rs. 625. Under the condition attached to the sale, he had to pay the full price immediately and until payment he was not entitled to remove the material. He paid Rs. 300. He borrowed Rs. 325 from one N who deposited that amount with the Municipal Committee. Being unable to pay off the loan, he sold the manure to N for Rs. 625 on receipt of Rs. 300 in cash and in adjustment of the loan of Rs. 325. N was the natural brother of H one of the accused. N got permission from the Committee to remove the manure. Thereon the accused got it removed through the Municipal sweepers to H's field. C. P. Tenancy Act (IX of 1898), s. 89—Surrender—Surrender by person of his tenant-right though not in possession of holding—Validity.

The surrender of a holding properly understood signifies the relinquishment of the tenant-right in favour of the landlord as affecting the parcel of land which is the subject-matter of the contract of tenancy. Surrender signifies the merger of the tenant-right in the proprietary right so as to convert the tenancy holding into the landlord's khudkasht. The tenant-right which means the right to cultivate the land is distinct from actual cultivation just as title is from possession. Delivery of possession is not a necessary ingredient of a validity of a transfer of title or any kind of right recognised by law. A fortiori, a relinquishment of a right to be valid need not be accompanied by delivery of possession. There is nothing in law to preclude the tenant from relinquishing his tenant-right because he is out of possession. Certiorari—Writ of—Powers of High Court to issue—Chief Judge of Small Cause Court hearing appeal under s. 217, City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), acting without jurisdiction—His act, if can be controlled by writ of certiorari.

The High Court has power to issue a writ of certiorari in respect not only of the orders of subordinate Courts, but also of the proceedings of any tribunal or officer who, though not a Court, is yet acting judicially in these proceedings. Although the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, hearing an appeal under s. 217, City of Bom. Municipal Act, 1888, be not a Court, his decision is a judicial act, and if he acts without jurisdiction or in excess of his legal authority, his act can be controlled by the High Court by a writ of prohibition or certiorari, as the case may be. It is no doubt true that sub-s. (1) of s. 219 of the Act provides that the decision of the Chief Judge upon any appeal under s. 217 against any such value or tax shall be final. But that only means that there are no further appeals but it does not affect the power of the High Court to issue a writ of certiorari. There are two conditions to be fulfilled before a writ can be issued, namely that the tribunal or officer whose act is complained of must be acting judicially, and that the act complained of must be without jurisdiction or in excess of the legal authority of that tribunal or officer. An officer or tribunal having jurisdiction to decide a question cannot be said to have acted in excess of the legal authority if the decision happens to be wrong. The mere fact that the order of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, is opposed to the principle of res judicata and that the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act, have been misinterpreted by him are not adequate grounds for the issue of a writ of certiorari. MULJEE SIOKA & Co. v. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER, BOMBAY Bom. 8

(a) and not of cl. (b) of exceptions to s. 13.*

The plaintiffs filed a mortgage suit against the minor daughter of the deceased mortgagor in the Osmanabad Court (Nizam's State) to recover the amount due under the mortgage deed by the sale of the mortgaged property and the balance out of the assets of the deceased mortgagor in the hands of the defendant. The defendant was then living with her husband in the Sholapur District in British India. Her husband was appointed her guardian ad litem. The defendant's husband, however, did not appear to defend the suit, and the Osmanabad Court appointed its nazir as the defendant's guardian ad litem. The nazir put in a written statement denying the mortgage, and after recording the statement of the writer of the mortgage deed, the Osmanabad Court passed a mortgage decree, which further provided that if the decretal amount was not satisfied out of the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property the plaintiffs were at liberty to apply for a personal decree against the defendant to the extent of the assets of her father in her hands. The decree was executed by the Osmanabad Court, and as the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property, were not sufficient to discharge the decretal amount the plaintiff filed a suit in the Court at Sholapur on the judgment of the Osmanabad Court, for personal decree against the defendant:

Held, that as the Osmanabad Court considered the plaintiffs' claim on its merits, and after taking evidence, disposed of the suit on the merits the defendant could not get the benefit of the exception contained in cl. (b) of s. 13, Civil P. C.

Held, also that that part of the decree passed by the Osmanabad Court against the defendant which was a personal decree against her must be regarded as a nullity.

Held, further that the Osmanabad Court acted beyond its jurisdiction in appointing its nazir as the defendant's guardian when her husband, who was her de jure and de facto guardian and had been appointed guardian ad litem by the Court itself, had never expressed his unwillingness to act as her guardian. In such circumstances the Court acted against the interests of the minor and against natural justice by indirectly compelling her to appear in the suit by appointing its own officer as her guardian ad litem. Moreover, it could not be said that the officer of the Court who was thus appointed guardian ad litem voluntarily appeared to defend the suit. He was after all an officer of the Court and had to obey the orders passed by the Court. When the Court appointed its nazir as the guardian, he had to appear and say something. Thus his appearance could not be regarded as a voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court. When such submission was not voluntary, then, it could not be said that the defendant rendered herself willingly amenable to the jurisdiction of the foreign. Hence, under the circumstances the personal decree passed against the defendant was an ex parte decree and the defendant did not voluntarily submit herself to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court. She was, therefore, not bound by the personal decree against her; and the suit, based on such a personal decree passed by the foreign Court, was liable to be dismissed. *GAJANAN SHESHADRI v. The words "relating to execution of the decree" used in s. 47, are wide enough to cover such a case. The order passed by the Court on such objection is an order coming within the scope of s. 47 and the appeal from such order is competent. MANMATHA PAL CHAUDHURY v. SARADA PROSAD NATH Cal. 67

Where a decree is passed against a person in his representative capacity and proceedings are taken under it to obtain execution in his representative character, he is a party to the suit in respect to any question which may arise between him and the other parties relating to the execution of the decree. Hence when a decree has been passed against a person in his representative capacity, he should, in execution proceedings, in his own capacity, raise any objection with regard to the property against which the decree is being executed. A judgment-debtor can raise an objection to the ex parte order of transfer under s. 47, Civil P. O. This objection is an objection relating to the execution of the decree as it is an objection relating to the first step in execution. An order overruling such an objection is one under s. 47 and is appealable. The Appellate Court has therefore to set aside the order. FIRM GANESHIDAS BADRINARAIN v. AMULOK CHAND OSWAL Cal. 895

s. 47—Sons, if can challenge decree or mortgage by father on basis of which decree is passed in execution.

Section 47, applies to matters which arise after a decree has been passed and not to those which were in existence even at the time when the suit was instituted. If objections regarding the correctness or the validity of a decree are raised by a person who was a party to the suit or by one who must be deemed to have been a party, these will be barred not by s. 47, but by some other provision of law. If, on the other hand, these are being raised by a third party and are of a nature which go to the root of the matter and attack the decree itself, they could not be gone into in execution proceedings for the simple reason that an execution Court cannot be asked to go behind the decree. If persons who were no parties to the suit on mortgage against father and who have been already found not to be represented by their father, desire to challenge the decree or the mortgage on the basis of which the decree was passed, they cannot do so in execution proceedings. *LAKSHMADU v. When a sale of immovable property has not been challenged by the judgment-debtors a sale certificate is granted by the Court. At the date of the grant of certificate the sale becomes absolute. The sale certificate granted by the Court to the purchaser is a formal document of title. When a sale has been confirmed by the Court and has become absolute under the terms of O. XXI it cannot be said that the sale is a nullity. The sale must be considered valid until it is set aside. Where a party to the execution proceedings has failed to challenge the sale under s. 47 or O. The term 'representatives' occurring in s. 47, Civil P. O., includes not only legal representatives in the sense of heirs, executors or administrators but also representatives-in-interest, that is, any transferee of the decree-holder's interest or any transfereeof the judgment-debtor's interest who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree.

Where therefore, a decree is obtained against legal representatives of the deceased in respect of a debt charged against the assets of the deceased and in execution of that decree the assets of the deceased are attached, the question whether the properties attached are assets of the deceased or belong to the legal representatives themselves, raised by the legal representatives or their transferees who are bound by the decree, is a question relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and must be determined in execution, and not by a separate suit. It is only when the judgment-debtor claims to represent the interest of a third party in whom the property is vested that the case would fall outside the purview of s. 47. In such a case as this what the judgment-debtor says is that although the property is vested in him it is so vested not beneficially but as trustee or executor for someone else. It is clear that in such a case the real objecting party is one who is a stranger to the suit and the objection having been made on his account his claim must be regarded as that of a third party and dealt with under O. It is true that there is no period of limitation for an amendment of a decree to correct an accidental slip or omission under s. 152, Civil P. P brought under wet cultivation by means of channel B an additional area which resulted in a suit being filed against him by R. The suit was compromised, whereby P was restrained from cultivating any further area by using the channel. P, however, subsequently brought under cultivation more area by use of the water from channel B. This resulted in execution application being filed by R in which the High Court ultimately held that P was not entitled to draw further water from either channel. P applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The value of the additional land brought under cultivation which resulted in the execution proceedings was under Rs. 10,000 but the value of the land affected by the decree was of the value of more than Rs. 10,000 :

— s. 144—Distinction made by s. 144 between restitution which is properly consequential on variation or reversal of decree and which is not—Reversal of decree—Possession taken under original decree, whether always wrongful.

Ordinarily, on the reversal of a decree for possession the judgment-debtor would be entitled to possession if claimed. The judgment-debtor would also be entitled to mesne profits during the period he was wrongfully kept out of possession. But it cannot always be said upon reversal of the decree, unless it gives clear indication of that fact, that the possession taken under the original decree is wrongful. Section 144, Civil P. O., makes a distinction between restitution which is properly consequential on the variation or reversal of the decree and restitution which is not. It emphasizes the fact that discretion is vested in the Court to make an order for mesne profits which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal. That distinction recognizes the possibility of a reversal not imprinting, on the possession taken, a wrongful character within the meaning of s. 2, sub-s. (12), containing the definition of "mesne profits." If in the order of reversal the character of that possession has been determined, then the question ceases. But if it is not and the Court remands the suit for determination of that question after fresh or further inquiry, then certainly it would be premature for the Court in the application by the successful appellant for restitution to make an order for mesne profits, for the Court would then be determining a question which was sub judice. GANPAT GATLU v. Where a decree on the face of it shows that a person sued in his representative capacity has been burdened with a liability which is not consonant with that capacity, the error is obviously that of a ministerial officer. In such a case the Court which made the decree and which is empowered by s. 152, Civil P. O., to rectify its error at any time, is not debarred from exercising its powers under the section, merely because that error has been brought to its notice in the course of an application, in which the decree-holder is seeking to execute the decree in a manner which the Court could never have intended when it passed the decree. GANESH PRASAD AGARWALLA v. —O. I, r. 9—Multifarious suit resulting in decree—Defect is considered to have been waived.

Under O. I, r. 9, Civil P. O., suits are not to be dismissed for misjoinder or non-joinder of parties and in case of misjoinder of causes of action the Court can in proper cases call on the plaintiff to amend his plaint by limiting the relief claimed to what he is entitled to in respect of one cause of action so as to avoid embarrassment. When this procedure is followed the plaintiff can of course bring a separate suit in respect of the other cause or causes of action. But when this course is not taken nothing turns on the fact that it might have been taken. Once a multifarious suit has been allowed to proceed and has resulted in a decree, the defect is considered to have been waived and is irrelevant. JANKI RAI v. Husband instituted a suit against his wife for divorce on the ground of her adultery. The wife brought a suit for divorce in the same Court against her husband on the ground of cruelty. The Judge without going into the merits gave two decrees for divorce. He made a note to the effect that this would not prejudice the parties with regard to anything that they might desire to establish in a subsequent suit in connection with the property of the marriage. Subsequently the wife brought a suit against her husband for partition and separate possession of the joint property of the marriage.

Held, that the note of the Judge in the divorce suit would be of no effect on the rights of the parties regarding marriage property.

Held, also that in the divorce suit although the husband did not insist upon proving his wife's guilt to obtain a divorce, he was not debarred from raising this point in a subsequent suit where the property of the marriage was involved. It was open to him to prove misconduct on the wife's part which would disentitle her from obtaining any of the joint property. MAUNG PO SEIK v. MA PWA TIN Rang. 380

II, r. 2, if applies—Compromise, if binding—Party acting on compromise, whether can plead that it was result of pressure and undue influence.*

In a previous suit the reversioners sued the widow for a declaration that the will in her favour by her deceased husband was not valid and that she had no right to certain properties situated within the jurisdiction of the Court. The suit however, was compromised. The compromise dealt with another property also which was outside the jurisdiction of the Court. Some money was to be paid to the widow. The Court by its decree "ordered that a decree be and the same is hereby passed on the terms and under the conditions embodied in the deed of compromise as a whole with this reservation that the sum stipulated shall be paid into Court within fifteen days from to-day, in case of failure the widow to be entitled to recover that amount by execution." The widow subsequently executed the decree and got the money stipulated in the compromise. The widow also gifted away the property, which was situated beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and which was given to her by the compromise for lifetime only. A suit was instituted by the sons of the reversioners for declaration that the gifts were beyond her power. The High Court held that by not including in the suit which was compromised a claim to recover possession of these lands the reversioner had forfeited all right therein by virtue of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. O.

Held, (i) that had that claim been included in the plaint, the suit could not have been entertained. Moreover so long as that suit was undisposed of it was always possible that the Court, if it thought that there was anything in the point as to O. II, r. 2, would give leave to the plaintiff to amend by including a claim to recover possession of those lands. Consequently O. II, r. 2, Civil P. O., did not apply.

(ii) That the Court had jurisdiction to pass a decree in terms of the compromise though it included the property situated outside its jurisdiction. When it was agreed that she should have the lands for her life, there was no doubt or difficulty as to the jurisdiction of the Court to include these lands within the declaration made as to the other lands and assets. It was no longer a question of a decree for possession but merely of a judicial determination as to the reversionary rights of the plaintiff or his descendants. Whether the Court acted irregularly and failed to comply strictly with O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Civil P. O., mattered nothing. He acted by consent and within his jurisdiction his decree was enforced in execution by the widow and no proceedings had at any time been taken to have it set aside. So the non-registration of the compromise which was referred to by the Court by date though not marked as exhibit, did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to pass the decree that the terms of the compromise should be carried out as a whole. And under Registration Act, s. 17 (i), no question of registration arose as regards decree.

(iii) Considered as a contract, the compromise was binding on the widow. The decree recorded the compromise though the compromise was not recited textually either in the body of the decree or in a schedule thereto.

(iv) That the widow took the benefit of the compromise and acted on it for many years before repudiating it. As she not only got rid of the claim of the reversioner to be the sole owner of her husband's lands and other assets, but enforced one of the terms of the compromise against him, there was more than sufficient prima facie evidence that she understood the transaction and that there was no pressure or undue influence.

Order XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. O., is sufficiently complied with by a reference to the compromise being made in the decree. JAGAI SINGH v. SANGAT SINGH

When a decree is transferred to another Court and the decree-holder dies before starting the execution proceedings in that Court, his legal representatives cannot institute the execution proceedings there until they obtain an order from the Court which passed the decrees under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. Therefore the darkhast which was started by the legal representative without getting an order under r. 16, O. XXI, must be held to be bad from its inception, and cannot be legalized by any waiver on the part of the judgment-debtors or by the production of an order that may be subsequently obtained under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree. Hence the transferee Court is not bound to stay the proceedings in order to enable the legal representatives to obtain such an order from the Court which passed the decree.

If a decree is once transferred to another Court for execution and the decree-holder who obtains such a transfer dies, the proper remedy for his legal representatives is to seek an order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree, and have that order remitted to the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution under O. XXI, r. 6 (c). If the application under O. XXI, r. 16, is granted by the Court which passed the decree, it may make an endorsement of that order on the decree and send a copy of the order along with the other papers to the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution. The Court appointed a Pleader on behalf of the minor members of the joint family in a suit against them, to be their guardian ad litem. But in the execution application no mention was made of the Pleader. The execution was sought to be taken against minors as under guardianship of another person. No notice under O. The proper remedy for a decree-holder on failure of the garnishee to comply with the notice under O. The difference between an irregularity and an illegality is one of degree, and an irregularity of so serious a nature as to render impossible the publicity which affords one main security for the fairness of public sales must be deemed to be an illegality. When sale is held two or three hours before the advertised time there is an illegality, as it is more than likely that intending bidders relying on the proclamation would not turn up until too late. The mere fact that there was beat of drum in the village just before the sale was actually held would not make any difference to intending bidders from outside. There is therefore a good cause for the Court to set aside the sale on its own initiative. In any case the matter can be dealt with under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. scope—Suit decided on merits—Failure to implead as defendant necessary party, whether ground for withdrawal of suit with liberty to bring fresh one, in appeal.

The sphere of "other sufficient reasons" in O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C., (Bhopal) is wider than the sphere of "some formal defect."

Failure to implead even a necessary party as defendant is neither such a formal defect as can be cured in appeal nor does it afford sufficient ground to withdraw from the suit with permission to institute the same afresh after it has once been heard and decided on merits. KISHORILAL v. SUNDARBAI

— O. XXIII, r. 1—Suit for ejectment against sole defendant dismissed on merits—Application in appeal to withdraw suit with permission to bring fresh one on ground that plaintiff forgot to implead defendant's son also—Permission held could not be granted.

Where a suit for ejectment brought against a sole defendant is dismissed on merits and plaintiff in appeal applies under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C., for permission to withdraw from his suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action on the basis that he had forgotten to implead along with the defendant her son also, such permission cannot be granted as to do so would mean to re-open the entire case against the successful defendant for no fault of hers. Addition of a new defendant in such cases virtually amounts to a complete alteration in the nature of the suit, which is not permitted in law, and the help of O. XXIII, r. (1) cannot be invoked to attain this end. Moreover the plaintiff has full right to sue the son for ejectment without withdrawing his suit with leave of the Court, and without regard to the result of the suit. Thus the plaintiff's remedy against the son of the defendant remains unaffected even if his suit fails on merits. Therefore there exists no sufficient ground to allow a withdrawal under O. XXIII, r. 1. KISHORI LAL v. SUNDARBAI

Under r. 1, O. XXIII, Civil P. C., a plaintiff can withdraw a suit as a matter of right without the permission of the Court; but if he does it he is then precluded from filing a fresh suit on the same cause of action. If he wants to withdraw the suit and at the same time wants to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action, he must resort to r. 2. Under the said Rule he must ask for permission to withdraw with liberty to file a fresh suit. The Court may grant the permission asked for on "such terms as it thinks fit." The terms may be of any kind. They might be: (1) That the plaintiff shall pay the costs before a certain date specified in the order, or (2) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs before the institution of the second suit, or (3) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs without specifying the time of the payment. If the terms imposed are as in illus. (1) or (2), they then obviously refer not to the withdrawal of the suit but to the institution of a fresh suit. Once permission is granted to withdraw, the suit can no longer be regarded to be still existing.

Where, therefore, leave to bring a fresh suit on the — O. XXIII, r. 1 (2), s. 115—Interpretation and scope of—"Formal defect," meaning of—Defect, should not affect merits of case.

Clause (a) of O. XXIII, r. 1 (2), Civil P. C., is illustrative of the "grounds" referred to in cl. (b), and although the "grounds" need not be ejusdem generis with the ground mentioned in cl. (a), they must be "at least analogous" to it. The ground in cl. (a) requires that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect; whereas the grounds contemplated in cl. (b) need not necessarily be fatal to the suit, but must be analogous to a formal defect.

The expression "formal defect" must be given a wide and liberal meaning, and must be deemed to connote every kind of defect which does not affect the merits of the case, whether that defect be fatal to the suit or not. This expression includes misjoinder of parties or of the matters in suit, rejection of a material document for not having a proper stamp and the erroneous valuation of the subject-matter of the suit. *RAMRAO BHAGWANTRAO INAMDAR v. Allowing the withdrawal of the suit on grounds not contemplated by O. XXIII, r. 1 (2) amounts to the exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court under r. 1 (2) and its order can be corrected in revision under s. 115. *RAMRAO BHAGWANTRAO INAMDAR v. For this purpose, no inquiry is necessary because the terms of the agreement themselves will show the defect. The Court therefore has to consider whether on the face of the agreement it is lawful or not. When a lease back is part of a transaction of mortgage and is merely a piece of machinery for realizing the interest on the mortgage, a suit for rent under that lease would in fact be a suit to realize the interest on the mortgage and under a decree in such a suit the equity of redemption could not be brought to sale unless the suit was actually framed as a suit on the mortgage. The fact that the mortgage was on one day and the lease on the next day has very little bearing on the question whether the lease and the mortgage form part of the same transaction. Nor the fact that an advance by way of security for rent was paid necessarily makes the lease something separable from the mortgage. Similarly the fact that the lease is expressed as ending on the same date as the date on which the right of redemption begins, is a clear indication that both the deeds form part of one and the same transaction. CHINNAPPAYAN v. Agriculturists Relief Act (XXVII of 1931)—Suit by mortgagee on mortgage in Bombay Court—Mortgagee, if can be restrained by injunction from proceeding with his case at Bombay.

The enforcement of a mortgage can never be characterized as an attempt to waste or damage any property.

The lawful exercise of a right vested in a person cannot be legally restrained by the Court under r. 2, O. XXXIX, Civil P. C.

A mortgage contained properties situated outside U. P. The principal and interest due under a previous mortgage formed part of the consideration of this mortgage and the deed stated that the first mortgage was satisfied and discharged. The mortgagor paid some instalments according to the terms of the mortgage on account of the interest but subsequently being advised that he was paying higher rate of interest than what he was bound to do as an agriculturist, a suit was filed by the mortgagor under s. 33, U. P. Agri. Relief Act, in the Court at Agra against the mortgagee. While this suit was pending the mortgagee brought a suit in Court at Bombay which had jurisdiction, for the enforcement of the mortgage. The mortgagor applied to the Court at Agra for the issue of an injunction restraining the mortgagee from proceeding with the Bombay suit and the application was granted. The suit at Agra was, however, dismissed and the injunction came to an end. An appeal was preferred by the mortgagor and he asked for an issue of an ad interim injunction which was rejected. An appeal was preferred to the High Court from this order and an application for temporary injunction, pending the disposal of appeal was made:

Held, that O. XXXIX, r. 2 and s. 151, Civil P. C., had no application. The mortgagee had a right to bring the suit in Bombay and his action was neither illegal nor dishonest nor even improper and hence the injunction restraining him from proceeding with the Bombay case could not be granted. *ABBU DAYAL v. Object of proceedings for contempt—Article in newspaper containing comments on finding of Magistrate held amounted to contempt of Court—Tendering of apology by accused, if sufficient for securing immunity from punishment.

The principle underlying the cases in which persons have been punished for attacks upon Courts and interferences with the due execution of their orders is not the protecting of either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of them, but the protecting of the public and especially those who either voluntarily or by compulsion are subject to its jurisdiction, from the mischief they will incur if the authority of the tribunal be undermined or impaired.

An article in a newspaper containing comments on the finding of the Magistrate in an inquest under s. 176, Criminal P. O., into the death of a person which are tantamount to imputations of deliberate perversity, incapability and partiality to the Police on the part of the Magistrate are calculated to bring into contempt, the Magistrate, in his capacity as such and for the publication of such article the editor and the publisher of the newspaper are liable to be dealt with for contempt of Court. Contract Act—cont'd.

only. The distinction between an agreement and a contract must not be lost sight of. It would thus appear that the provisions of s. 65, Contract Act, were only intended to come into play when an agreement was discovered to be unenforceable at law according to the rules laid down in ss. 96-97, U. P. District Municipalities Act or ss. 68 and 69, Mad. District Municipalities Act. The result is that instead of their being any conflict between the special and general laws we find that the general law would permit a party to get relief when on account of a special law the agreement cannot be considered to be enforceable or in other words characterized as a contract. *MADURA MUNICIPALITY v. The second part of s. 65, Contract Act, namely "or to make compensation for it," only comes into play when the advantage cannot be restored. Interest on sum paid under void contract would only be payable after the advantage has been refused to be restored.

The claim for interest on the ground of negligence on the part of the vendor in overlooking the provisions of the law, cannot be granted as it is equally the vendee's duty to know the law. For this reason also the claim for interest is not sustainable. Further, the claim for interest based on negligence of the vendor is governed by Art. 36, Lim. Act and not by Arts. 97 or 62.

Where a contract of sale is found to be void and the amount paid under it is repaid by the vendor to the vendee, the vendee is not entitled to any interest on the amount from the date of its payment to the date of the institution of the suit for damages by the vendor for breach of contract if it is not proved that the amount had earned any interest in the hands of the vendor. DISTRICT BOARD FERROZPORE v. BALWANT RAI Lah. 742

— s. 65—Suit under s. 65, nature of—Interest on amount of compensation.

In a suit on the basis of a contract, a party is trying to enforce its terms while in a suit under s. 65, a party merely asks for restoration or compensation as the agreement has not matured into a contract and he wants to be placed in the position in which he would have been if no agreement had been entered into.

In the absence of any contract, there is no liability to pay any interest and the same cannot be decreed. MADURA MUNICIPALITY v. K. ALAGIRISAMI NAIDU Mad. 780

— ss. 65, 70—Contract of sale unenforceable for want of sanction under s. 68, Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920)—Vendee unable to restore goods—Must make compensation.

The language of s. 65, Contract Act, includes agreements which are destitute of legal effect from their inception. When an agreement is discovered to be unenforceable and not illegal and when a party has not been guilty of any conduct which would disentitle him to come to Court there appears to be no reason why the principle underlying s. 65 should not be given effect to. It would be extremely inequitable to find that when a contract has not been entered into by authorized persons or is found to be unenforceable for want of certain formalities, the advantage gained by a party should not be, when it was not intended to be gratuitous, restored or compensated. The relief which a person asks for under s. 85, Contract Act, has not been forbidden by any law and it cannot be legitimately argued that in trying to secure such a relief he is attempting to do indirectly what he had been forbidden by law to do directly.

So where a contract of sale is found to be unenforceable for want of a sanction under s. 68, Mad. District Municipalities Act, the vendee who has received the goods but is unable to restore them must make compensation for that under s. 65 or s. 70, Contract Act. *MADURA MUNICIPALITY v. K. Copyright—Musical composition—Talkie film adopting title of song but not repeating in any form its words—Whether infringement of performing right in musical composition—Passing off—Such use of title, if constitutes "passing off."

There cannot be an infringement of performing right in a musical composition (assuming it to exist) unless there has been a public performance of the musical composition by the defendant. A musical composition is performed by audible reproduction, by the voice of or by musical instruments or by mechanical methods of reproduction. But where not a word of the song is repeated in any form in the talkie film except that the title is thrown on the film at the outset, this does not constitute infringement of performing right in musical composition.

In general a title is not by itself a proper subject-matter of copyright. As a rule a title does not involve literary composition and is not sufficiently substantial to justify a claim to protection. That statement does not mean that in particular cases a title may not be on so extensive a scale and of so important a character as to be a proper subject of protection against being copied. Where the theme of the film is different from that of the song there is no ground in copyright law to justify the claim to prevent the use of the title of the song for the film which is too unsubstantial to constitute an infringement, especially when used in so different a connection.

It cannot be said that in no circumstances can there be a "passing off" by the use of the same title for a literary, artistic or musical work though it is difficult to imagine such a case where there are no circumstances calculated to mislead other than the mere title. A title may, however, be used in the case of a book or newspaper under such conditions that persons may be deceived into buying the defendant's book or newspaper under the impression that they are buying that of the plaintiff. Similarity of name may be strengthened by similarity in make up, and in subject-matter, and by other circumstances. Nor is such a claim limited to things sold, though it is commoner in that class of case. It is not impossible that there might be "passing off" of such a nature that persons might pay to go to a performance of the defendants' work under the impression that they were going to witness the plaintiff's work. Such cases are perhaps not very likely to occur, but there may conceivably be the same element of likelihood of deception, whether designed or not, as to involve an invasion of the plaintiff's Common Law rights and a disturbance of his business interests. But the thing said to be passed off must resemble the thing for which it is passed off. A frying pan cannot be passed off as a kettle.

Where a talkie film uses the title of a song but the theme of the film is different from that of the song and the song is not sung at any performance, there is no "passing off." FRANCIS DAX & HUNTER LTD. v. TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX CORPORATION LTD. P C 449

Co-sharers—Mortgage by one co-heir of his own share as well as that of others without their consent—Suit by mortgagee—Appointment of Receiver—Rights of enjoyment of other co-heirs, if prejudiced.

The possession of one co-heir is possession not only for himself but also for other co-heirs. The fact that he had without their consent, purported to mortgage not only his own share but also theirs is not in itself an indication that his possession had become adverse to theirs. The mere fact that a Receiver was appointed in the mortgage suit brought by the mortgagee against the mortgagor co-heir would not prejudice them in the enjoyment of their right they being persons with paramount rights, not parties to the action and actually in possession of those rights. *S. All the co-parceners in a joint patti or mahal are joint owners of the site of the houses of tenants and raiyyats situated in that patti or mahal. If the tenants or raiyyat dies without leaving any heir or abandons the house the right to the joint possession of the site and the materials vests in all the co-sharers and in such a case one co-sharer has no right to take possession of the materials or of the site to the exclusion of the other co-sharers. It is also clear that a tenant or a raiyyat has the right to transfer the materials of the house to any person he likes provided the materials belong to him and there is no custom prohibiting such a transfer. A sale of his house by a tenant or raiyyat to one of the co-sharers, does not entitle that co-sharer to retain possession of the house along with the site to the exclusion of the other co-sharers. The tenant or raiyat has a disposing power only so far as the materials of the house are concerned and has not a transferable interest in the site of the house. The retention of possession by one of the co-sharers of the house of a tenant or raiyat that has been purchased by him furnishes the other co-sharers with a cause of action for a suit for joint possession of the site by removal of the materials. The question of special damage does not arise and the cause of action in such cases is constituted by the invasion of the right of the co-sharers to joint enjoyment of the site of the house. *DARSHAN SINGH v. Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7—Suit instituted on March 1, 1937, i. e., before amendment of Act in 1938—Law applicable—Plaintiff in possession of house in suit, requiring cancellation of sale deed alleged to be obtained by fraud—Court-fee payable.

Suit brought on March 1, 1937, before the amending Court Fees Act of 1938 was passed, will be governed by the provisions of the Act as it stood unamended.

The provisions of the Court Fees Act as it stood before the amending Act was passed and even those of the amending Act clearly show that the Legislature has made a distinction in the amount of court-fee between suits for possession of immovable property and those seeking reliefs other than possession in respect of immovable property, the court-fee required in the case of the latter suits being much less than that required in suits for possession.

Where the plaintiff is herself in possession of the house in suit and all that she requires is cancellation of the sale deed which she said was obtained from her by fraud and undue influence in such a suit, she cannot be required to pay ad valorem court-fee on the market value of the house which is the court-fee payable on a suit for possession. The plaintiff can therefore be allowed to pay court-fees only on declaratory relief. ORI LAL v. RAHIM ZADI Oudh 454 sort the extent to which the defendant's property will be depreciated should be taken to correspond to the value of the benefit which the plaintiffs seek to obtain if they succeed in their suit. s. 106—Expression "offences involving breach of peace," meaning—Conviction of accused under s. 294, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) — Order under s. 106, when can be made.

The expression "offences involving a breach of the peace" in s. 106, Criminal P. O., means offences in which the commission of a breach of the peace is a necessary ingredient, or offence the commission of which has actually led to a breach of the peace (irrespective of the party by which that breach is committed). It is impossible to construe the word 'involve' as equivalent to the words 'likely to lead to.' The mere use of abusive language in a public place is not of itself a breach of the peace, though of course it is likely to lead to one. It is not one of the offences affecting the public tranquillity mentioned in s. 106. The words "breach of the public peace" have not only in popular usage but in law, the significance of a disturbance of the peace by something more than mere abusive or obscene words, that is to say, by resort, if not to actual violence, to threats of it. In other words, the word 'peace' is used as a synonym for security rather than for tranquillity. Where therefore an accused person is convicted of an offence under s. 294, I. P. O., an order under s. 106 cannot be made unless there is a finding that active criminal intimidation or assault, etc., have actually occurred in consequence of the obscene abuse. *THE KING v. A Magistrate, as an emergency measure, has power to stop, by an order under s. 144, Criminal P. C. the holding of a Jhat, or the exercise of his rights by a man on his own land. But a man, who holds a hat on his own land, is perfectly entitled to do so and that by itself is not a wrongful act. Competition in trade, unless illegal methods are adopted, is not a wrongful act. When a rival business is started in close proximity to a previously established business the person interested in the latter is bound to object to the former and some sort of strained feeling is inevitable. This by itself is no ground for restraining the new comer from carrying his trade unless he is doing or is likely to do any wrongful act which may lead to a breach of the peace. In such a case the best course is to prohibit the doing of the wrongful act or if necessary, to bind down the wrongdoer under s. 107, Criminal P. C. Sub-ss. (1), (4), (5) and (6) of s. 145, Criminal P. C., are complementary. Once an order has been passed under sub-s. (5) to terminate the proceedings in the circumstances therein contemplated. The words of sub-s. (4) "The Magistrate shall then....." are mandatory. On the completion of the inquiry under sub-s. (4) a final order under sub-s. s. 145—Magistrate, if and when can cancel his order under s. 145 (1) or terminate proceedings.

Sub-sections (4) and (5) of s. 145, Criminal P. O., are not exhaustive and are not intended to prevent a Magistrate from terminating proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., when he is satisfied that the very cause and reason of proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., has ceased to exist. The Magistrate can cancel his order under sub-s. (1) or terminate the proceedings when, upon other information, or, it may be, on his own information he is satisfied that no dispute likely to cause a breach of peace exists. However as proceedings are instituted upon some information, so they should be terminated likewise upon some information and ordinarily it is desirable before a Magistrate terminates proceedings of this sort in the exercise of powers which by necessary implication, the section confers, that he should have on record a Police report or other information to the effect that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. But where, the diary shows that the parties attended the Court from time to time, talked about a compromise and then finally stayed away and did nothing for months, that might be said to constitute information which would justify a Magistrate in his opinion that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed any longer and would justify his order terminating the proceedings. s. 164—Admission of incriminating facts by accused to Magistrate under s. 164 or to Court during trial—Admissibility under ss. 18 to 21, Evidence Act (I of 1872).

Considerations which attach to the question of the admissibility of a confession made under s. 162, Criminal P. The protective provisions of s. 162, which apply, to statements by accused persons to the Police, or at least to accused persons who are at first witnesses, have their origin in the infirmities which it is believed, may affect the evidence of the Police in India as to statements made by accused persons. Such considerations are obviously not applicable to statements made to Magistrates either under s. 164 or s. 342. An admission of incriminating facts made by an accused person to a Magistrate under s. 164, or a statement made to the Court during the course of the trial is admissible in evidence for what it is worth against the person who makes it under ss. 18 to 21, Evi. If the Magistrate to whom a case is transferred under s. 192, Criminal P. O., lacks jurisdiction to try the case the order of transfer is bad in law. A First Class Magistrate taking cognizance of a case under s. 427, I. P. O., cannot transfer it to a

It may be that after a trial, it is found that the case has been materially exaggerated; but unless it has been found at the very outset that the allegations are exaggerated with the intention of seeking a particular Court for redress the statement of the complainant in a criminal case and the statement of the plaintiff in a civil case has to be accepted for the purpose of jurisdiction. Hence, the trial of the case by the Third Class Magistrate is illegal. The case is not covered by s. 537, Criminal P. The question of joinder and misjoinder depends on the form of the accusation made rather than on the facts actually proved at the trial. The nature of the charge is really the crucial point. Before a joint trial can be held to be permissible or justifiable it must be established that each one of the accused was so connected with the other accused that the act done by one of them may be said to have been done conjointly with the other.

The fact that the accused are all servants of the same master and so connected with the same person, does not necessarily involve connection with each other for the purposes of the offences charged. Similarly common purpose would not be enough to make offences part of the same transaction, if the offenders act independently. Where the accusation does not involve anything from which it could be said that the accused are charged with different offences as forming part of the same transaction joint trial cannot be held. *NATHU CHAUDHURY v. In a trial by jury it is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury the necessary ingredients which the prosecution has to prove before the charges can be held to be established. This is particularly necessary in a case where the main charges are of cheating. Where the cheating consisted mainly of false representations to the complainant by the accused that he would arrange to have certain contracts obtained for himself and for the complainant and the allegation of the prosecution is clearly that at the time he made these representations they were false in the sense that he had no intention of fulfilling them, it is clearly necessary to point out to the jury the difference between a promise which is not intended to be kept at the time it is made and a promise which is intended to be kept at the time it is made but is subsequently broken. In the latter case the offence would not necessarily be one coming under the legal definition of cheating. Failure to do so amounts to misdirection. ARNOLD MONTEATH MATHEWS v. EMPEROR — ss. 339 (2), 164—Statement of confessional nature recorded before tender of pardon, not strictly according to provisions of s. 164—Admissibility of, against accused in his trial after forfeiture of pardon.

Any statement made by an accused person before he receives pardon under s. 337 must, if it is of a confessional nature, be recorded strictly in accordance with the procedure prescribed for the record of confession by ss. 164 and 361, or the statement of the accused after he has been pardoned may be recorded in his character of a witness under s. 164, Criminal P. O., or his statement may be one which is recorded formally as that of a witness examined in the course of an enquiry or trial. The word "statement" contemplated in sub-s. 2 of s. 339, appears primarily to refer to a statement made by him as a witness as contemplated in sub-s. 2 of s. 337 in the course of an enquiry or trial. It may also include a statement recorded under s. 164 after the tender of pardon but it can in no case include a confessional statement made by an accused person before the tender of pardon unless it was recorded in accordance with the strict procedure provided for recording confessions.

Hence a statement made by the accused, of a confessional nature, before he had been tendered pardon and after he was put on solemn affirmation, is inadmissible against him in his trial after he has forfeited the pardon if it is not recorded as a confession in the manner prescribed by ss. 164 and 361. It is also otherwise inadmissible for the reason that the accused was induced to make that statement implicating himself and others on the promise of a pardon. HORILAL v. EMPEROR Nag. 203

Sub-s. 2 of s. 339, Criminal P. O., has to be read in conjunction with s. 337. Section 337 itself does not contemplate and authorise the recording of any statement by the accused as a preliminary to the tender of pardon. HORILAL v. EMPEROR Nag. 203

Whether the Magistrate should hold the trial at a place other than his Court-house is a matter purely within the discretion of the Magistrate himself. Where he decides to hold the trial in the jail premises he must pass a formal order directing that the trial should be held in the jail premises. Such a formal order must invariably be passed, as otherwise, if accused persons consider that they have a grievance in any matter it would be difficult for them, in the absence of any formal order, to have recourse to higher authority for redress. It is ordinarily for the trying Magistrate to take the initiative in these matters if he considers that the trial should not be held in his court-house. If, however, the District Magistrate, who is responsible for law and order in his district, wishes to take the initiative in such matters himself, his proper course is not to move the Local Govt. himself straightway in the matter, but to instruct the Public Prosecutor to make an application to the Magistrate asking that the trial shall be held elsewhere. It is then for the Magistrate to pass formal orders as to whether he considers it desirable to hold a trial in the Court or outside of it. If the Magistrate then wishes to try the case in a place other than his Court, he will do so after obtaining the permission of the necessary authorities who are in control of the premises in which the Magistrate desires to hold the trial. *THE KING v. Section 415, Criminal P. O., refers to two or more punishments of different kinds. It has no application in a case in which two non-appealable sentences of fine have been passed and the aggregate amount of fine does not exceed Rs. 50.

An accused who was convicted of rioting only and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20 filed an appeal under s. 415-A. If the High Court finds in a case of trial by jury that there is a misdirection it has to examine the evidence to see whether the verdict was erroneous and has caused a failure of justice. If it cannot so find, it cannot interfere. One meaning of word 'erroneous' s. 423 (2), Criminal P. O., is that if the Court after examining the evidence finds that, even if the misdirection had not occurred, the jury could not reasonably without being perverse or unduly foolish have come to any other decision it will not interfere. It is, however, clear from s. 423 (2), that even if there is a misdirection, the High Court is not entitled to alter or reverse the verdict or verdicts unless these verdict or verdicts are "erroneous" by reason of such misdirection and before the High Court interferes it must also find that there has been a failure of justice under s. 537. *ARNOLD MONTBATH MATTHEWS v. An increase of roughly 10 per cent. in the price of a pair of dhotis can hardly be said to be an act likely to cause fear or alarm to the public or to any section of it, within the meaning of r. 34 (6) (g), whatever other consequences it may have on the public mind. Such an act is not likely to have any bearing on the efficient prosecution of the war and the defence of India or the public safety nor can it be said to prejudice the public interest within the meaning of r. 34 (6) (p).

O., the proceedings under s. 476 must be regarded as independent, and when the applicant in the affidavit upon which the application is based admits the decree and there is no question of the decree being proved against him by the adverse party, s. 44, Evi. Act does not apply to this application. Although the Criminal Courts have no jurisdiction to revoke the probate it has full jurisdiction to decide that it was a forgery in a criminal case in which the party offering the evidence of forgery admits the probate to be valid and admits the title of the executor, but seeks to show what means he used in order to become so. Having regard to s. 44, Evi. Act, it would be equally open to the party offering the evidence of forgery to prove that the probate decree was obtained by fraud, if it were set up against him by the accused, instead of admitting the probate and the title of the executor. In the case of an application under s. 476, although s. 44, Evi. Act, does not apply, evidence of forgery is admissible in the same manner as it would be admissible in a criminal case, the applicant admitting the validity of the probate decree and the title of the executors. *BHAGWANDAS NARANDAS v. ss. 44, 41—Judgment in probate suit is judgment in rem—Stranger's right to impeach decree in rem—Party against whom judgment is set up, if should bring separate suit.

A judgment in a probate suit is a judgment in rem.

By reason of s. 44, Evi. Act, the law in India is different from that in England, and in India the argument that a decree in rem even of a foreign Court cannot be contested at all, or can be contested only by the parties to the suit in which it was pronounced, cannot be accepted, and further in India a decree in rem which is relevant under s. 41, can be contested on the ground of fraud or collusion which does not go to the jurisdiction of the Court. Apart from s. 44, a stranger to a suit in which a decree in rem has been passed may impeach that decree for fraud and have it set aside if the fraud be proved. It is not necessary for the party against whom a judgment is set up to bring a separate suit to have it set aside, but he may show in the suit or proceeding in which it is set up against him that it was obtained by fraud. *BHAGWANDAS NARANDAS v. The word 'execution' as used in the proviso to s. 68, Evi. ss. 68, 71—S. 71 is exception to rule in s. 68—"Execution," in both sections, meaning of—Mortgage deed—Attesting witness turning hostile—Mortgagee can give evidence to prove attestation by others.

Section 71, Evi. Act, is one of the exceptions to the rule relating to proof of documents, required by law to be attested, which is laid down in s. 68, Evi. Act. The Rule in s. 68 is stringent rule and it cannot be relaxed except under circumstances provided for in the Act itself. One of such exceptional circumstances is to be found in s. 71.

The same meaning must be given to the word 'execution' in s. 71 as in s. 68, Evi. Act. In the case of a document which is not valid without attestation execution not only means signing by the executant but it means and includes attestation as well which is the last of the series of acts necessary to give completeness and formal validity to the deed. Hence it would be necessary to call an attesting witness under s. 68 not merely to prove the signature of the executant but to prove attestation as well and if such witness turns hostile or refuses to prove execution or attestation other witnesses may be called for the same purpose.

A mortgagee being grantee of the instrument cannot witness the execution of the document made to

The Legislature, has not left the fate of attested documents completely at the mercy of the attesting witnesses. The plaintiff's duty is at an end as soon as he calls one of the attesting witnesses under the provisions of s. 68, Evi. Act. If the witnesses turn hostile the plaintiff is not helpless and he is entitled to adduce other evidence as laid down in s. 71. s. 92 Proviso (3)—Applicability—Whether can be applied to nullify effect of document.

Section 92, proviso 3, Evi. Act, speaks of the existence of a separate oral agreement, constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property which may be allowed to be proved. This clearly presupposes that in a case to which it could be applied the contract, grant or disposition of property itself remains intact, but that the condition precedent pleaded must in its very nature be extraneous to the contract, grant or disposition itself and as agreed must come into existence before the obligation attaches thereunder.

Where in a case on a promissory note the facts pleaded do not aim at proving a condition precedent to the attaching of the legal liability to the document, but lay the axe at the very foundation of it nullifying entirely the effect of the promissory note and its existence, s. 92, Proviso 3, is not applicable and such evidence will not be allowed. *OHHAGANLAL KALYANLAL SINGH v. s. 163—Applicability to criminal trials—

Signed statements of witnesses to Police made use of by Counsel for accused to contradict witnesses in cross-examination—Entire statements excluding irrelevant portions should go in as evidence.

Section 163, Evi. Act, is applicable to criminal trials as well as to civil actions. Where therefore the Counsel for the accused make use of the signed statements of the witnesses in the Police diary at the cross-examination in order to contradict their evidence at the trial, the entire signed statement of the witness to the Police excluding only such portions as are not relevant to the case should go in as evidence. This would bring on the record those parts of the signed statement which were corroborative of the witness's evidence at the trial.

In this case however, it was held that in the particular circumstances, the accused could not be compelled to give as evidence the signed statement in question as there was no formal notice or requisition from the accused calling for the document and while producing the Police diary the Govt. Counsel said that he would not rely on the strict technicality meaning thereby that he would not require the Counsel for the accused to put the document in evidence. *EMPEROR v. Executor—Liability—Executors of deceased debtor giving security by equitable mortgage over asset of deceased's estate to one of creditors in respect of debt due from estate—Personal liability of executors—Security given in consideration of creditor's forbearance to sue for two years and promising to pay interest for that period—Executors held personally liable for interest for aforesaid period, but not for whole debt.

If the executors of a deceased debtor think fit for consideration to give security by deposit of title-deeds over an asset belonging to his estate to one of his creditors in respect of a debt due from the estate, the transaction may or may not be one to which other creditors or persons can take exception. But if it is not intended that the executors should assume personal liability for the secured debt there is nothing in the T. P. Act or in the law of India to make them so liable by reason that they have granted the security or by reason that they have done so by deposit of the testator's deeds.

Where in consideration of the creditors' forbearance to sue for a period of two years the executors gave security for the testator's debt by equitable mortgage of the right, title and interest of the testator making it clear at the time that the payment to the creditor was conditional upon the sufficiency of the assets and depended upon the future of land values and the executors also undertook to pay interest on the debt for the aforesaid period of two years:

Held, that the promise to pay interest not having been expressly qualified, in the context there was not enough to show that the promise was intended as conditional upon the sufficiency of the testator's assets having regard to the limited period of time (two years) to which it extends and the circumstances of the transaction. The executors not having made it clear that their words of promise were not to be taken in the direct and simple sense of a personal covenant, made themselves personally liable for the interest which accrued during the two years with interest thereon.

Held, also that the fact that the executor was to assume liability for the interest alone and that only for a defined period did not impose a liability for the whole of the debt. JAMSHEDJEE JEEJIBHOY v. SORABJI BYRAMJI WARDEN P. C. 773

For owners of houses abutting on a public highway, the question of frontage means a great deal, and if anything is done by those in whom the highway vests, which interferes with the rights of the owners with regard to the highway, and which tends to diminish the comforts of the occupants of the houses, the owners have an actionable claim against them.

Hence where a Municipal Committee proposes to sell a portion of a street in front of a person's shop for the purpose of building shops and the person has not merely a frontage but it is a frontage of more than usual value because his is the first shop in the mandi which persons coming from the station towards the main gate of the mandi would have to pass and his shop would be shut out by the buildings proposed to be erected he is entitled to sue the Municipality for an injunction restraining them from selling the proposed land.

— Effect on family partnership.

Ordinarily in Hindu Law the rights of an adopted son arise at his adoption. Even in the case of an adoption by a widow, though the adoption by her is for her husband still the adoptee's rights do not relate back to the death of the husband. But in the case of a trading partnership the adopted son takes the place of the deceased as from the date of his death, thus preventing its automatic dissolution. Under the ordinary law a firm of partnership dissolves upon the death of a partner and his heir does not ipso facto become its member since the continuance of a partnership depends upon the mutual consent and confidence of the partners. These incidents have, however, no application to an ancient family trade in which partnership continues unaffected by the deaths of old members and the births of new ones. As such, a partnership of which the father was a member would continue in spite of his death, the son taking the father's place whether then living or posthumous. As such if a person was afterwards adopted his adoption relates back to the death of the father, so that the partnership is deemed to continue with him added as a partner from the date of the father's demise. *KESRI SINGH v. Although at first sight it seems that there is little distinction in principle between a mortgage given for an antecedent debt, and a mortgage for a debt incurred for the first time when the mortgage is executed, yet, if the distinction is observed, it will tend to preserve the property in the family as it will render it more difficult for a Hindu father to incur debts which might ultimately have the effect of dissipating that property. But this does not empower the father to alienate his son's share in the ancestral property except for a legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or for the payment of an antecedent debt not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes. Once it is proved that there was an antecedent debt, genuinely independent of the subsequent transaction of alienation, or that the alienee inquired and believed in good faith that such a debt existed, and that the alienation was made for satisfying that debt, then the burden of proving that the antecedent debt was incurred for immoral or illegal purposes lies on the son who impugns the alienation. Hindu Law—contd.

ed that the particular antecedent debt was incurred for immoral purposes or was connected with some act of immorality. If this is not proved by the son, then it is not necessary to consider whether the antecedent debt was incurred for any legal necessity or for the benefit of the family. If the alienation challenged be a sale, it would not be set aside if a substantial portion of its consideration was required for a legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or to pay off an antecedent debt which was not immoral or illegal, although the remaining portion was not so required. The material question to be considered in such cases is whether the sale itself was justified. If so, the sale will be upheld as a whole. But the case of a mortgage stands on a different footing. If a part of its consideration is for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or for the payment of such an antecedent debt as to justify the alienation, and the other part is not so, yet not being borrowed for an immoral or illegal purpose, is such that the son is under a pious obligation to pay it, then the former alone will be a charge on the son's interest in the property, while the latter is not binding on the son as a mortgage debt, but only as an unsecured debt of the father. RAGUNATH RAMCHANDRA JEE v. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN JEE Bom. 71

— Debts—Antecedent — Debt by father by exchanging villages—Subsequent mortgage in favour of stranger to pay off this debt—At time of incurring debt, subsequent mortgage in contemplation—Debt, if deprived of its character of antecedency.

Where father incurred debt by exchanging villages and subsequently executed a mortgage in favour of a stranger to pay off the earlier debt, the earlier debt is an antecedent debt, in fact as well as in time. The character of the debt cannot be altered by the fact that at the time of incurring the debt the father knew that he would not be able to meet the liability and had in contemplation the execution of the subsequent mortgage to pay the debt. RAM KUMAR SINGH v. PARAM SINGH All. 215 — Antecedent—Word "rina," interpretation of—Unascertained liability of partner, whether debt according to Hindu Law.

The significance of the sanskrit word rina for apportioning rights or liabilities, must not be determined by reference to its English equivalent but by the original sanskrit word itself, giving to it just the meaning in which it is used or understood in the parent language in its literal or even colloquial sense. The word 'debt' is not the exact equivalent of rina in sanskrit at any rate with all the technical import that that word carries. The words dhana and rina coupled together in the texts, are used in a comprehensive sense, for describing all varieties of divisible assets and liabilities. As dhana includes in its connotation all varieties of property and assets, there is no reason why rina should not be held to include all varieties of obligations and debts as well.

Hence, the unascertained liability of a partner in partnership is a debt according to Hindu Law although until the settlement of partnership accounts the relationship of debtor and creditor does not exist. NACHIMUTRU GOUNDAN v. BALASUBRAMANIA GOUNDAN Mad. 735 ing nature of debt not allowed to be raised—Sons, if in separate suit can dispute the existence of debt.

The pious duty of a son which makes him liable to pay his father's debt assumes the existence of certain debts which have to be paid. The question of illegality or immorality would only arise when the debts were in fact incurred. It is only when a debt is proved to exist and found not to have been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, that the father could be said to have been sued in a representative capacity. So where in a suit against father on mortgage of ancestral property the sons are not impleaded but are brought on record after the death of the father after the passing of the preliminary decree and are not allowed to raise the question regarding alienability of the mortgaged property and binding nature of the debt, the sons, in a separate suit are not precluded from disputing the existence of debt itself. LAJSHMADU v. RAMUDU Mad. 816

Debts—Father—Surety debt—Liability of son—Pious obligation.

Under the Mitakshara the son is liable to pay the debt incurred by the father as the result of being a surety for payment of money lent and for delivery of goods. This liability of the son, however, is not higher than the pious obligation that rests on him for the payment of his father's personal debts, and is limited to his interest in the joint family property. DALJIT SINGH v. HARKISHAN LAL SAH All. 152

Son's liability—Father defending suit on behalf of minor daughter and setting up false will—Father ordered to pay costs personally on that account—Liability of sons for such debt.

Where the Court orders the father to pay personally the plaintiff's costs in a suit in which the father defends his minor daughter, for setting up a false will, although the father is not party to the suit, such a debt must be said to be a debt tainted with illegality or immorality for which his sons cannot be held liable. The costs of the appeal must be dealt with in the same way as the costs of the suit, if in prosecuting the appeal the father is acting in the same illegal and immoral way. VEDULA LAKSHMINARASIMHAMURTI v. MEDURI VENKATA JOGISO MAYYAJULU Mad. 861

Joint family—Interest of undivided member attached in execution of money decree against him—Attachment released on objection by other members of joint family that property was sold to them—Suit to set aside sale as fictitious—Defendant dying—Plea that there is no property against which decree could be executed, if can be taken.

When a suit is brought against a member of a joint Hindu family for a declaration that the sale deed in favour of the defendant's nephews who formed along with the defendant the joint family of the property attached by the plaintiff in execution of his money decree was fictitious and fraudulent and was executed with the object of defeating the plaintiff's claim against the defendant, and the defendant dies during the pendency of the suit in the original Court, it cannot be said that as he was a member of a joint Hindu family, there was no longer any property against which the plaintiff could proceed. If the undivided interest is attached during his lifetime it may be sold after his death whether the order for sale was made in his lifetime or after his death. The contention would be sound if the undivided interest of the defendant had not been attached in his lifetime in the execution of a decree against him for his personal debt.

There is no rule which forces a decree-holder to ask for execution against the whole of the undivided share of a Hindu co-parcener when the sale of only a part of it would be sufficient. SURAJ BAKSH SINGH v. THAKUR DAS Oudh 90 business—Business carried on by member in partnership with stranger—Presumption that it is joint family business.

Under Hindu Law, there is no presumption that a business carried on by a member of a joint family in partnership with a stranger is joint family business. The presumption of Hindu Law that, where a nucleus is proved, all properties standing in the name of its members, were acquired out of the family funds and belong to the family, cannot be extended to cases of partnership with strangers. *BEOPAR SAHAYAK BANK LTD., MEERUT v. Partition—Evidence of—Conduct of parties.

Where there is no definite evidence of separation taking place at a particular time the separation of a family can be proved by the conduct of the family and the attendant circumstances.

The partition of joint estate consists in defining the shares of the co-parceners in the joint family and it is not necessary that there should be an actual division of the property by metes and bounds and the definition of shares may be proved by an entry in the Record of Rights showing the shares of each member of the family, and, further such an entry will be evidence of the severance of the joint status. PIRTHI PAL KUNWAR v. SURAJ KUNWAR Oudh 179

Shares—Mother's share—Succession to—Mother living jointly—Effect on succession—Stridhan.

Hindu Law—contd.

According to the Mitakshara Law, the mother or the grandmother is entitled to a share with sons or grandsons dividing the family estate between themselves but she cannot be recognized as owner of such share until the division is actually made as she has no pre-existing right in the estate except a right of maintenance. Where she is allotted her share in the partition yet her share is not partitioned she cannot be said to have become the owner of the share allotted to her and it remains in the joint family.

The rule that in cases governed by the Mitakshara the share allotted to a mother on partition is not her stridhan and that on her death it passes not to her stridhan heirs but to the sons or grandsons out of whose portion it was taken out, is a general rule applicable to a case in which all the members of a joint Hindu family have separated. It cannot apply to a case in which though one of the members of a family has separated the mother has continued to live jointly with the other members, for in the latter case it is obvious that the members who continued joint will form a joint Hindu family and succession to the property held by them will be governed by the rules of Hindu Law applicable to a joint family. *SRI RAM v. Religious Endowment—Math—Alienation—Effect—Whether binds successor.

In case of an inam of the nature of a devasthan inam the mahant or Shankaracharya for the time being would have no power to alienate the Math property whether by sale or permanent lease so as to bind his successors except in the case of legal necessity. The mahant, therefore, who has made the inam grants has no power to alienate permanently the right of the Math to recover assessment from the lands, or in other words to grant the lands permanently free of assessment. The grant would in each case endure only during the life-time of the mahant who made it, and succeeding mahants would be entitled to repudiate the grants and to recover assessment within 12 years of his becoming mahant. *SHANKARACHARYA v. Math—Suit for possession of property alleging its illegal transfer by previous persons in lawful possession thereof—Plaintiff must show some right or title to claim possession—Mere worship of image does not constitute math or give right to plaintiff to bring suit for possession of zamindari property.

No doubt anyone who is a worshipper at a temple or of an image, if he obtains permission under s. 92, Civil P. O., can bring a suit for the declaratory reliefs allowed by that section, but where a suit is not one under s. 92, but a suit for possession of property alleged to have been illegally transferred by previous persons, who were in legal possession of that property, the plaintiff would have to show some right or title to claim possession. Will—Testator bequeathing moiety in favour of son R—Other moiety to be held in trust for R's male issue—In case of R's death without male issues this other moiety to go to R. D. Trust Estate—Gift to Trust Estate, if void—This gift, when takes effect.

In truth, inheritance is not donation, and a bequest is not a donation de praesenti between living people. It is to be recognised that the Hindu Law has been greatly influenced by the notion of "relinquishment in favour of a sentient being" as the basis of a gift and of inheritance, but this principle has not been allowed to arrest the development of the Hindu Law of wills. The doctrine that there must be acceptance at the time of relinquishment has different values according as it is applied to gifts inter vivos or is extended by analogy to bequests or inheritance, though by a theory of some refinement heir and donee were once thought to be equally governed by the same principle. The theory, is sometimes put by saying that the estate cannot remain in abeyance. Thus it appears that property in the heir must arise immediately upon the death of the ancestor in the same manner as the property of the donee arises immediately upon relinquishment by the donor. But it must needs be admitted that the rigour of this theory, even if it be not destructive of all future gifts, is inconsistent with any recognition of contingent or executory bequests. It has effect (save in so far as the Legislature has abrogated it: Hindu Wills Act, 1870 Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916), to limit the class of persons who are capable of taking under a will, restricting it to persons who either in fact or in contemplation of law are in existence at the death of the testator. But it does not remain as a further obstruction to the taking by such persons of a beneficial interest known to and permitted by the law. Indeed, if an estate in remainder can be limited to take effect on the natural determination of a life estate and may be so limited upon a condition which may never be fulfilled if a gift over on condition may be good though in defeasance of an absolute estate granted by the will, there is no principle of Hindu Law to be saved by refusing to recognise a limitation to take effect upon condition in the future because it lacks "support" from a particular estate. It cannot be disputed that if a conditional limitation is invalid, the interest, unless otherwise disposed of by the will, must go to the heir. But if limited interests are to be recognised, there is no reason to hold that because a prior interest goes to the heir as such a conditional limitation or any other limitation is bad at Hindu Law.

The principle of Hindu Law which prevents an estate being in abeyance is an important doctrine of the law of inheritance and it has important consequences as regards adoption. The rule is that the right of succession vests immediately on the death of the owner. Apart from the case of a child en ventre sa mere or of an adopted child, the estate once vested in an heir will not be divested by the subsequent birth of a person who would have been a preferable heir had he been alive at the time of the death of the last owner. In like manner, though the doctrine is not really the same, delivery in some sense is necessary at Hindu Law to distinguish the completed gift from the mere promise. But neither of these doctrines nor yet the principle that a man cannot devise an interest of a nature and quality unknown to the Hindu Law (e. g., descendible in a manner unknown to that law) conflict with the principle that where there is a will the heir can as such take only that part of the testator's property which is not disposed of by the will. He will take by descent and by his right of inheritance whatever is not validly disposed of by the will and given to some other person.

A testator bequeathed a moiety of his estate to his only son R and as regards the other moiety it was provided that it was to be held by R and certain other persons in trust for R's male issue. It was further provided that in case of R's death without male issue this other moiety was to go to a certain trust known as R. D. Trust Estate:

Held, that merely because of the failure of the testator's disposition of the interest in favour of the R. D. Trust Estate during the life-time of R, the bequest in favour of the R. D. Trust was not invalid. This gift to R. D. Trust took effect on the death of R without leaving male issue, who as heir of the testator would take the prior interest for his own life in this moiety such interest not having been disposed of by the will. The contention that the testator's directions to regulate the devolution of his property though within limits laid down by law would fail if the heir took any interest immediately upon the death of the testator, was fallacious, for it assumed that the complete interest in the property had devolved on the heir, which was the very point in dispute. *GADADHAR MULLICK v. Hundi or bill of exchange, nature of—Bilateral document, if hundi—Hundi drawn by A on his own firm in favour of B—Document is pro-note—Such document not properly stamped under Arts. 39 and 12 (b), Bhopal Stamp Act is inadmissible under s. 33.

A hundi or a bill of exchange being a negotiable document is drawn by one person who is called a drawer, on another person who is called a drawee, who is ordered to pay the amount thereof to a third person who is the holder. Thus three persons are parties to a bill of exchange. A document which is not of this nature is not legally a hundi or bill of exchange. A document which is only bilateral cannot be called a bill of exchange.

Where therefore a hundi is drawn by A on his own firm ordering the amount thereof to be paid to B after Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 4, 66—Permanent lease granted—Salami received by lessor once for all, whether capital receipt or income.

Per Fazl Ali, J.—Income in the Income Tax Act connotes a periodical monetary return, coming in with some sort of regularity or expected regularity from definite sources. The premium or salami which is paid once for all and is not recurring payment, hardly satisfies this test. If the premium represents the whole or part of the price of the land it cannot be income.

Per Manohar Lall, J.—It would be impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule that a salami can in no case be taxable but the question would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case.

Where a certain amount was received by a lessor as salami once for all at the time of granting a permanent lease:

The word "business" has been used in the Act to denote the continuous and systematic exercise of an occupation or profession with the object of making income or profit, and where the element of continuity is wanting in a particular activity, that activity cannot be characterized as "business" within the meaning of the Act. "Profession" or "occupation" can amount to business only if it is continuously and systematically exercised. Whether the maintenance of a racing stable does or does not in a particular case amount to "business" must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. It is impossible to lay it down as a general proposition of universal application that, in all cases where an element of sport or amusement is involved, a particular activity, howsoever systematically and continuously exercised, cannot amount to business. The question in each case must be what was the dominant intention. If the dominant intention was to get income or make profits or gains the activity of the description referred to above must amount to "business." *COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX v. Held, (per Bajpai and Braund, JJ.)—That upon the material before the Court the assessee was not entitled to claim a set-off of losses either on the racing establishment or on the betting account (Per Iqbal Ahmad, J., contra.)—There was no material on which it could be held that the maintenance of the racing stable and the series of betting transactions by the assessee did not constitute his business. — s. 10—Association for advancing and protecting business interests of members—Running of Produce Exchange Department and charging of fees from members for services rendered—Whether doing business within meaning of s. 10—Saving from payments by members, if profit or gain.

Where an Association is an Association for the purpose of advancing and protecting the business and trading interests of its members there is a certain mutuality between the Association and its members. The basis of mutuality is not destroyed because one of the objects of the Association is to further not only the particular interests of its members but of trade and commerce outside the particular city where the Association is formed. Hence the activities of the Association in maintaining and running the Produce Exchange Department and charging fees for the various services rendered by it to its members do not amount to doing business within the meaning of s. 10, Income Tax Act. Such a case does not fall outside that class of cases where a number of individuals for the common good combine to provide by common sacrifices a common organization to do for them more efficiently as a body what they could do individually but less efficiently for themselves and the fact that from the payments made by the members themselves there is a surplus or saving upon the year's working, does not constitute that surplus or saving a profit on gain. *COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, SIND ADEN v. In the case of a company the tax has to be paid by the company direct and not on behalf of the share-holders, and this is rendered clearer by the provisions as to return of income and assessment of companies contained in ss. 22 and 23 of the Income Tax Act. *BAI LALITA RATANOHAND KHIMOHAND v. — ss. 20, 51—Certificate under s. 20, when no income-tax is payable, if necessary—S. 51, if applies—Tax by company on profits distributed—Tax, if can be deducted from dividends.

The provisions of s. 20 are no doubt mandatory but they only apply where the company is liable to tax. A certificate to the share-holders under s. 20 is not necessary where no income-tax is payable by the company. The penalty imposed by s. 51 on a failure to furnish a certificate under s. 20 only arises where the failure is without reasonable cause or excuse, and the fact that the certificate would be untrue as no income-tax was payable by the company would provide reasonable cause for not issuing it.

Section 20 clearly recognizes a right in the company to deduct tax where tax has been or will be paid on the profits distributed. Income-tax has to be discharged out of profits before any distribution can be made, and where tax has been paid, the company must apportion the burden amongst the different classes of share-holders, according to their legal rights. No doubt deduction of tax at the standard rate is a rough and ready method of apportionment, but to pay dividends in full to the preference share-holders would be to give them a tax free share and throw the whole tax onto the ordinary shares.

Where, however, no income-tax is payable by the company and there is no burden to adjust, there is nothing in the Act to justify the company in making any deduction in respect of income-tax from the dividends paid. BAI LALITA RATANOHAND KHIMOHAND v. TATA IRON AND STEEL Co., LTD. Bom. 389 F B year are not at all relevant for the purpose of an assessment relating to a particular year.

The assessee a firm of partners were doing business in shares and held at the beginning of the accounting year an opening stock of shares valued at certain cost. Their stock of shares had always been valued at cost. During the year there had been no transaction in shares. At the end of the accounting year their partnership was dissolved and shares were allotted to the partners at the valuation based on the market value of the shares on the date of the allotment. The assessee in the year of assessment claimed to deduct the difference between the opening stock valuation at cost and the valuation at market rate on the date of allotment of shares to the partners, as loss:

Held, that the assessee was not entitled to do so because, as the stock was at all previous times valued at cost price and was brought into the balance sheet at the beginning of the year at its cost price, then, when it was taken out of the assets of the company, it also should be valued in the same way at the cost price. The system of valuation which the assessee contended for had the effect of bringing into the accounts of the year a loss in respect of this stock which had not occurred during the year. *CHOUTHMAL GOPALOHAND, In re Cal. 722 s. 26-A. The facts that the business transferred is an agency business cannot, always be decisive to exclude the application of s. 26, Income Tax Act, because many businesses sell as agents the goods of others.

A certain motor company terminated in December 1930 an agency for sale of its cars given by it to another firm A, and gave it to the assessee firm from January 1931. On January 22, 1931, A sold to the assessee all its business as a going concern and the assessee firm took charge of the business and buildings as a going concern as its vendor went out. There was thus continuity and identity:

Held, that the assessee firm could be taxed as a successor of firm A within the meaning of s. 26 (2) of the Income Tax Act. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, SIND AND ADEN v. NARAIN DAS & Co. LTD (FIRM) Sind 893

Jurisdiction—Foreign Court—Decree passed ex parte by British Indian Court against resident of State not submitting to its jurisdiction—Validity—If can be enforced in State—Foreign country, what is—Indian States, whether foreign countries in relation to British India.

It is a well-settled rule of international law that Courts cannot by their judgments bind absent foreigners who have not submitted to their jurisdiction, and can only exercise jurisdiction over persons who are within the territorial limits of their jurisdiction, and, therefore, a judgment of a foreign

Court obtained against an absent defendant cannot be enforced where the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit was neither a subject of, nor resident in the country in which the judgment was obtained.

A decree against an absent foreigner is valid only so far as the same is made operative by local Legislature within the country of the forum pronouncing the same. Beyond the limits of that country the decree would remain a nullity in spite of the authority given to it by the local Legislature.

An Indian State whose Legislature is not subject to the Legislature of British India is a distinct and separate political entity. Such a State is, therefore, a foreign country in relation to British India within the meanings and for the purpose of the Civil P. O. Section 20 of Civil P. O., (of British India) may give jurisdiction to British Indian Courts to pass a decree against residents of such a foreign State but it has no effect against State subjects within the territorial limits of that State and should be considered an absolute nullity. Hence a decree passed by a British Indian Court against the subject of Bhopal State who at the time of commencement of the suit did not reside or carry on business within the jurisdiction of such Court either personally or through a properly constituted agent and who did not submit to the jurisdiction of such Court is a nullity, and is not enforceable against the defendant in the forum of Bhopal State, wherever the cause of action might have arisen. KESRI SINGH v. HARKANWAR BAI Bhop. 19

Foreign Court—Submission—Putting appearance to search papers after ex parte decree or executing general power-of-attorney to defend suits in foreign Court does not amount to submission to jurisdiction.

Putting in an appearance to take search of papers after an ex parte decree was pronounced, by a foreign Court does not amount to an act of submission to jurisdiction. So also mere execution of a general power-of-attorney in favour of certain person for defending suits in foreign Courts does not amount to submission to jurisdiction of foreign Courts. KESRI SINGH v. HAR KANWAR BAI Bhop. 19

Foreign Court—Submission to its jurisdiction—Effect—Ex parte decree—Steps taken to set it aside and suit defended—Whether submission to jurisdiction—Decree passed on merits—Binding effect—Test to determine whether decree is passed on merits.

Where in a suit filed in British Indian Court against the defendant, a resident and subject of an Indian State an ex parte decree is passed and the defendant gets the ex parte decree set aside and files written statement and defends the suit through properly constituted attorney, these acts amount to voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. The case no longer remains ex parte against him and a decree subsequently passed on merits is fully binding on him.

The true test for determining whether a judgment has or has not been passed on merits is to see whether it has been pronounced as a penalty for any conduct of the defendant, or whether it is based on a consideration of the truth or otherwise of the plaintiff's case. KESRI SINGH v. HARKANWAR BAI Bhop. 19

Jurisdiction—Small Causes—Nature of small cause suit—Suit for fixed amount—Defendant's plea giving rise to settlement of accounts—

Jurisdiction—concl'd.

Nature, if changed—Suit against agent for value of tickets received and not accounted for is cognizable by Small Cause Court—Small Cause Courts Act (Bhopal).

The essential nature of a suit for accounts is that therein the plaintiff does pray for a decree for a fixed sum of money, but only wants rendition of account by the defendant followed by a decree for the amount found due. Such suits are excluded from the purview of Small Cause Courts Act. But a suit which is essentially of small cause nature does not change its character merely because the defendant has chosen to raise a plea of account. It is possible that even in claims for a fixed amount the defendant's plea might some time give rise to the necessity of settlement of account, but this alone would not convert a suit for a fixed sum into a suit for account. Even if the Court has to go into the parties' account to a certain extent, the jurisdiction of Small Cause Court is not ousted. A suit against an agent for value of goods received and not accounted for by him would lie in a Court of Small Causes.

The plaintiff had given to the defendant a number of admission tickets in connection with a wrestling match to be sold on commission. The defendant sold these tickets to the public and pocketed all the money realized thereby. Thus the plaintiff neither got any unsold tickets back from the defendant, nor any money on account of such tickets as were disposed of. The price of the tickets was fixed and their number was in dispute. The plaintiff brought a suit in Small Cause Court to recover full face value of the total number of tickets :

Held, that the suit was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. ISHAQUE ALI v. ABDUS SAMAD of amount of compensation—Question of title to land acquired, relevancy.

The jurisdiction of the Court on a reference by the Collector is a special jurisdiction. If the only objection is to the amount of compensation, that alone is the matter referred to, and the Court has no power to determine or consider anything beyond what is referred. The question of title to the land acquired is, therefore, not relevant in a reference on the question of the amount of compensation only. In an inquiry as to the amount of compensation only, the question is how much more the claimant is to get and how much more is the Govt. to pay. The only question is the additional amount of compensation. Landlord and tenant—Assignee of lease, if liable by privity of estate to payment of rent to lessor.

In India an assignee of a lease is liable on the covenants by privity of estate to the payment of rent to the lessor. The manner in which the interest of the lessee becomes vested in the assignee is immaterial, provided the method is such as in law vests the whole interest of the lessee in the assignee. The doctrine, therefore, applies even where the title of the assignee is derived under a Court sale.

But the liability to interest arises purely under the contract contained in the lease. It is not a liability which runs with the land or is attached in law to the interest of the lessee, and it is not a

There is nothing in the Legal Practitioners Act, which directs the District Judge to hold the inquiry. The act leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the High Court. The High Court and not the Act nominates the tribunal. Therefore, when the High Court directs a District Judge to hold an inquiry into a charge of professional misconduct the District Judge does not hold the inquiry under the Act but under the order of the High Court. Before the District Judge can be allowed to pass on his duty to some one else there must be very clear authority for his action. The Madras Civil Courts Act, s. 3-A does not provide it. s. 14—Suit on mortgage—Cause of action, how determined—Striking out relief for sale of property, whether changes cause of action—Plaint returned after amendment to proper Court—Plaint, if, if entitled to benefit of s. 14.

"Cause of action" and "relief" are quite distinct and the question whether two proceedings are based upon the same cause of action or different causes of action cannot be decided upon the terms of the reliefs claimed in either proceeding.

A suit based upon a mortgage deed is essentially a suit to recover a loan and the cause of action for such a suit is the failure of the defendant to discharge the loan. A mortgagee in a suit founded upon a simple mortgage proceeds on the same cause of action whether he claims only to recover the loan advanced by him or presses also for the additional relief to enforce the charge in his favour. Where the plaintiff based on a mortgage deed after deletion of relief as to sale is returned from regular side for presentation to the Small Cause Court the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of s. 14, Lim. s. 14—Want of jurisdiction, if should exist at date of suit, for applicability of s. 14.

The want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature referred to in s. 14 need not be in existence at the very institution of a suit. All that the law requires for the applicability of s. 14 is that the Court in which the previous proceeding is prosecuted should be unable to entertain it from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature. Want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature may arise at any stage of a suit or proceeding and if upon that basis the Court in which the suit or proceeding is being prosecuted arrives at the conclusion that it cannot entertain it and makes an order accordingly the condition laid down in s. 14 is sufficiently fulfilled. *DAL SINGHAR KOBRI v. s. 20—Interpretation—Interest bearing debt—Payment of part amount on open account in handwriting of debtor—Appropriation by creditor—Amount not paid as interest “as such”—Whether should be regarded as part payment of principal—Appropriation by creditor should be before expiry of limitation.

Section 20, Lim. Act must be construed carefully according to its terms, and effect must be given to the consideration that in order to give a fresh period of limitation interest must be paid as such though there is no similar requirement in the case of a part payment of principal. It is not reasonable as a matter of construction of a statute to suggest that the words “as such” can be ignored; or that their meaning has changed; or that they can be given their meaning but only as regards payments made before January 1, 1928.

By the amendment of s. 20 the intention of the debtor is not made the sole test whether a payment was made towards the principal of the debt. Appropriation by the creditor can have effect under the section as it now stands and the character of the payment need not necessarily be determined at the time when the payment is made.

The section cannot be read as governed by any such principle as that it must be read as proceeding upon an acknowledgment by the debtor of his liability familiar though it be in the law of England. There is no sufficient reason for the assumption that the section is an expression of any single principle. In the Lim. Act, s. 19, which deals with acknowledgments, is not to be read as based upon the theory of implied promise; and it is difficult to see why s. 20, which deals with payments, should be regarded as based upon a theory of acknowledgment. The words in s. 20 by which the matter must be judged are “where part of the principal of a debt is paid.” As it is not prescribed by the section that the payment should be intended by the debtor to go towards the principal debt at all, the words “as such” having no place in this part of the section, it is not correct to require that the payment should have been made of part as part.

It cannot be maintained that a payment on general account is either a payment of interest as such or a part payment of principal. The disjunction is incomplete; there are additional possibilities as well. There are indeed four possibilities as to the debtor's intention—(1) intention that the sum paid should go against interest, (2) that it should go against principal, (3) that it should go against both interest and principal, (4) no intention of appropriation as between interest and principal. This is a common enough frame of mind when a payment is made generally on account of a debt—an “open payment” as it is called.

In the case of “open” payment the creditor's act of appropriation of the payment to the principal debt is a very different matter. It cannot have been intended by the Legislature that at the end of the prescribed period the right to sue should be barred and yet that the creditor might thereafter remove the bar at his own choice by making an appropriation. Though it need not be shown that the creditor's appropriation has within the time limited been communicated to the debtor, the language of the section cannot be regarded as satisfied unless within the prescribed period the creditor has in exercise of his right done something which treats the payment as made on account of principal. To evidence a definite appropriation to the principal debt made by the creditor within the period prescribed the manner in which the payment has been dealt with by the creditor in his own books of account will ordinarily be sufficient. But if it be true until after the expiry of the prescribed period the creditor has treated the sum as paid on account of interest or has not done anything to treat it as paid on account of principal, then under the amended s. 20 part payment of principal has not been established. The result may be regarded as unfortunate since the fresh period begins or does not begin according as the creditor has or has not taken some step in consequence of the debtor's act, whereas the essential matter is really the debtor's act, but unless either a part payment of principal is required to be made as such in order to stop the running of the statute or a payment on account of an interest bearing debt, though made generally on account, is made sufficient for that purpose there is no escape from this conclusion:

Held, on evidence that the debtor paid Rs. 100 in his own handwriting and the creditor appropriated it towards principal straightway. This payment must be held to be part payment of principal. RAMA SHAH v. LAL CHAND PC 233

s. 20—Payment of interest—If must be in handwriting of or under signature of party making it—Whether can be inferred that payment was of interest “as such,” from circumstances.

For a payment of interest to come within the purview of s. 20 of the Lim. Act, it is sufficient if circumstances exist which make the conclusion inevitable that the payment must have been made on account of interest. The payment of interest “as such” need not necessarily appear in the handwriting of or under the signature of the party making the payments. No doubt it is necessary that at the time of the payment it must be clearly mentioned that the payment was being made on account of interest but where the payment is proved to be on account of interest not only by the evidence of the witnesses but also from the fact that an account of interest due has been drawn up on the back of each bond and the payment has been shown as being out of that amount the payment falls within the purview of s. 20, Lim. Act. BACHCHU LAL v. BHAGWATI Oudh 94

s. 20, sub-s 1, proviso—Proviso applies to sub-s. (1) only.

It was not the intention of the Legislature in enacting proviso to sub-s. 1 of s. 20, Lim. It would in this case be an unfair hardship on the mortgagor if the property mortgaged were to be saddled with the costs awarded against the subsequent purchasers and against them, alone. The ordinary rule of the costs in a mortgage suit being amalgamated with the money realisable by sale of the mortgaged property did not apply to the case. DEVI KISHAN v. CHAMPALALSA conditional sale. In the latter mortgage one of the points which the parties desire to express is the period when foreclosure will arise and another point which they desire to express is within what period redemption is to be allowed. There is no reason to make these two periods the same and the natural agreement would be to allow redemption up to a certain date, and if not made by that date then to allow the right to foreclosure to begin. No such points arise in a simple mortgage; and in a usufructuary mortgage the important point is that the usufructuary mortgagee desires to hold possession for a certain time in order that he shall have the benefit of such a period. *ASHRAFI LAL v. —Priority—Subsequent mortgage in favour of another, of some properties covered by earlier mortgage—Yet subsequent mortgage in favour of earliest mortgagee to pay balance due on first mortgage with additional security and lower rate of interest—Suit by first mortgagee within 12 years of due date under third mortgage but beyond that due under first mortgage—Later mortgagee held not entitled to priority and suit not barred by limitation.

After executing a mortgage in 1912, the mortgagor executed in 1916, another mortgage in favour of another person by hypothecating some of the properties comprised in the mortgage of 1912. Again in 1922, he executed mortgage in favour of the first mortgagee, the amount secured by this mortgage being the balance then due to the first mortgagee under the earlier bond of 1912. In this mortgage, the mortgage of 1912, was specifically referred to and it was stated that the properties of the mortgage of 1922, were subject to the mortgage of 1912. In the mortgage of 1922, additional security was given and there was stipulation to pay lower rate of interest. A suit was brought within 12 years of the due date of payment of the bond of 1922, but more than 12 years of the due date of payment of the bond of 1912:

Held, that by the mortgage of 1922, the mortgagee never gave up his security under the bond of 1912, and the effect of the mortgage of 1922, was merely to substitute the covenant to pay the mortgage amount on the due date stated in this bond in place of the covenant to pay as stated in the bond of 1912. The suit was, therefore, a suit on the bond of 1922, and the right of the mortgagee, so far as the property stood charged in the bond of 1912, had never been given up; charge could still be enforced and was always enforceable so long as the full amount secured was not repaid. Consequently the suit on the bond of 1922, was not barred by limitation, the mortgage bond of 1912, was kept alive, and the claim of priority by the later mortgagee must fail. *SINGHESHWAR SINGH v. —Agreement that mortgagor may redeem within stipulated time, validity.

Ordinarily and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of this specified period, but there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of a mortgagor. ASHRAFI LAL v. ZAMIR FATIMA BIBI

—Redemption—Limitation—Mortgage before

1882—Limitation for redemption—Statutory right under Bengal Regulations I of 1798 and XVII of 1806—Redemption suit brought more than 60 years—Applicability of Art. 148, Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

In case of a mortgage by conditional sale executed before 1882, (before T. P. Act), the mortgagor has a statutory right under Ben. Regns. I of 1798 and XVII of 1806 to redeem within any stipulated period provided in the deed. Therefore, even if there had been only a period of 2 years in the deed, the statutory right existed by which the mortgagors can have redeemed from the date of execution and the suit for redemption brought more than 60 years would therefore be barred by the period of limitation under Art. 148 of the present Lim. —Redemption—Mortgage of entire property to K—Subsequent mortgage of one-fourth share by co-sharer to plaintiff—K obtaining decree purchasing property in execution and selling it to B—Plaintiff no party to suit—Suit by plaintiff decreed and one-fourth property purchased by him—Plaintiff held entitled to redeem entire property.

A mortgage of an entire taluk was executed in favour of K. Subsequently the plaintiff company obtained a mortgage of one-fourth share of the taluk from A who was a co-sharer in the mortgaged property. K instituted a suit on mortgage and got a decree. The plaintiff, was not made a party to that suit. K in execution of the mortgage decree put up the entire taluk to sale and purchased it himself and then sold it together with all his subsisting rights under the mortgage decree to B. The plaintiff company, in the meantime, instituted a suit on their mortgage bond against A and having got a decree purchased a fourth share of the mortgaged property and instituted a suit for redemption, against K and B.

Held, that the plaintiff's right of redemption extended to the entire mortgage of K and was not confined to so much of it as related to one-fourth share of the property. In allowing the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage he could not be directed to deposit the amount due under the decree passed in favour of K as he was not a party to the mortgage suit and hence was not bound by the decree. *AMULYA KRISHNA BANDOPADHYAYA v. —Sub-mortgagee—No notice of sub-mortgage to original mortgagor—Sub-mortgagee bound by state of accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee—Suit by mortgagee on mortgage—Compromise decree—Sub-mortgagee obtaining decree on his mortgage and purchasing mortgaged property—Suit by heirs of original mortgagor for possession—Sub-mortgagee held could claim only amount given by compromise decree.

The sub-mortgagee stands in a no higher position than, the mortgagee. He is bound by the state of account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. He must take the accounts as they in fact stand subsequent to creation of security unless and until he protects himself by giving notice to the mortgagor.

M mortgaged certain property to J and J mortgaged the same property with some other property to P. M, however, had no notice of this sub-mortgage. J brought a suit on his mortgage and a compromise decree was passed which he did not execute. Subsequently P obtained a decree against J and in execution thereof purchased the property.

Minor—concl.

The heirs of M brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property to which P pleaded that he was not bound by the decree in J's suit and that the security still subsisted:

Held, that the decree in J's suit fixing the state of account between J and M, though a compromise decree was binding upon P. That though the security subsisted for certain purposes after the passing of a decree, it subsisted only in respect of the decretal amount and hence P was not entitled to claim the total amount due on his sub-mortgage. *BHAGWATI PRASAD v. —Muhammadan Law—Waqf—Proof of—Dedication, if must be proved—Whether can be proved by evidence of user—Private ownership of plot—Inference.

Waqf implies dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith of any property for charity, or for religious objects or purposes, or for an object of public utility. Waqf property, is subject to certain rare exceptions, inalienable and a suit for a declaration that property belongs to a waqf can be brought by Muhammadans interested in the waqf. In order to establish a waqf the necessary dedication must always be proved. Lapse of time frequently renders it difficult or impossible to establish dedications by direct evidence, but waqf may be established by evidence of user.

Private ownership of a plot is incompatible with dedication of it under a waqf as a graveyard for Muhammadans in general. FAKIR DOST MAHOMED v. CHAINRAI Sind 227

A obtained a Namjogi hundi drawn by B and made payable to C whose name was mentioned in the hundi as payee. On receiving the hundi A sent it by ordinary post to C. The hundi, however, was intercepted by a thief who removed the name of C, the payee, thus making it read payable to third person by making an endorsement making it payable to one G. Held, that the drawee not being in a position to return the hundi in an undischarged state would certainly be liable in damages for wrongful conversion of the hundi, the measure of damages being the amount of the hundi.

Held, also that the drawer was in no way responsible for the hundi falling into the hands of the thief, or the alteration which resulted in the loss of money to A or in the payment by the drawee of the hundi; hence the proximate cause could not be laid at the door of drawer and he was, therefore, not liable. In s. 9, Oaths Act, the expression "any party to any judicial proceeding" must be interpreted as including the Counsel or agent duly authorised to represent him in the case.

If a Pleader is authorised by the vakalatnama in his favour to do all proper pairvi in the case and to represent his client in a litigation and to present all sorts of applications which may become necessary, even though no express power to compromise the case on his behalf may have been conferred upon the Pleader, still the Pleader being a duly authorised person to represent the client would be fully entitled to bind the client by offering to abide by the special oath of the opposite party. For the purposes of s. 9 all that is necessary is that the Pleader or the agent should be considered a duly authorised agent on behalf of his party to conduct the case.

Obiter.—Apart from the written authority pointed out above, a Counsel appearing in a case from the very nature of his duties and for the purpose of a proper conduct of the case must be deemed to have implied authority to admit or deny a document, to press or withdraw an issue in the case, to examine a witness or call no witnesses and do such other acts which are required for the proper management and conduct of the trial.

The definition of abetment in s. 107, I. P. O., includes not merely instigation, which is the normal form of abetment, but also conspiracy and aiding, and those three forms of abetment are dealt with in the proviso to s. 111.

Where an act is abetted, and the abetment takes the form of instigation of an act, and a different act is done, that different act must be a probable consequence, and committed under the influence of the instigation; and where the abetment takes the form of aiding or a conspiracy, the different act must be a probable consequence and also with the aid or in pursuance of the conspiracy. Where the accused judgment-debtor immediately after giving an undertaking to the Court not to transfer certain property, transfers the same in favour of his son by a sale deed with the knowledge that his son would be in a position to claim the property as his own, the intention to cause injury clearly exists in such a case and the case falls under s. 206, I. s. 415.—Cheating—Deception—When amounts to cheating—Giving post-dated cheque by person having no funds in Bank—Dispute held of civil nature.

Deception is only one element of the offence of cheating and not the only element. There can be no cheating unless by reason of the deception the person deceived is induced to part with any property or to do or omit to do anything that he would not do or omit to do but for the deception.

Hence giving a post-dated cheque by a person who has no funds to his credit in the Bank does not amount to an offence of cheating when there is no evidence to show that the person to whom the cheque was given parted with any property or that he did or omitted to do anything which he would not have done or omitted to do if he had known that the cheque would be dishonoured. The dispute in such a case is of a civil nature. R. S. RATRA v. GANESH DAS Lah. 123

An owner of a tea estate made an application to the Tea Licensing Committee for transfer of export quota rights in which he mentioned the export quota far in excess of what was fixed to his credit by the Committee. A clerk of the Committee whose duty was to check whether the transferor had in fact the quota sought to be transferred to his credit, wrote on the application that the quota mentioned therein was 'available' for transfer. Due to this false endorsement the transferor was granted the quota transfer certificate which enabled him to transfer export quota rights far in excess of what was to his credit and thereby made a huge wrongful gain:

It is necessary for the prosecution, when the charge is under s. 471, I. P. C., to show that the accused knew or had reason to believe the document to be forged and used it fraudulently or dishonestly.

Meaning of the expression "fraudulently or dishonestly" discussed.

Where the execution is sought on the basis of a copy of the decree in which the dates were altered under the impression that the decree was time-barred, a sufficient intent to defraud is involved in the advantage directly aimed at by the petitioner on the basis of the altered dates, and it is immaterial that the alterations were brought about under an erroneous impression that the decree was time-barred. A fraud, it is clear, is attempted upon the Court and in such a case it is not necessary for the prosecution to go further and establish an intent to cause loss or risk of loss. But even if the contrary were to be held, the definition of injury in s. 44 of I. P. C., is very wide, and the threat of a decree that could not be executed by any competent authority is a threat of harm or injury within the meaning of the Code. *BAIJ NATH BHAGAT v. Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 12—Arrangement between pensioner and his creditor to pay portion of pension to creditor and deposit pension papers with creditor—If falls under s. 12.

The language of the Pensions Act is very wide and the transaction by which a pensioner arranges with his creditor to pay a certain portion of his pension month by month in liquidation of the sum previously advanced, and to deposit with the creditor his pension pay order and pension papers is clearly one of the class of transactions which s. 12, Pensions Act is enacted to prevent. In re, IGUSTINS ROADRIK Cal. 699

Plaint—Amendments. SEE Civil Procedure Code, 1908, O. VI, r. 17 266

Amendment—When allowed—Suit on instalment bond with default clause that on default of any one of instalments creditor would recover whole amount—Plaint stating that first two instalments were paid on due dates—Objection by defendant—Plaintiff by amendment seeking to mention real dates of payment and pleading waiver of right to sue for whole amount—Amendment held did not interfere with defendant's right to plead limitation and should be allowed.

No amendment can be allowed which has the effect of depriving the defendant of any right already acquired by him or of altering the cause of action in any suit. Amendment of every other kind is permitted. An amendment which deprives the defendant of his existing right is really against the spirit of the procedure, but such an amendment must always be permitted by which the defendant's plea of limitation against the suit might entirely fall to the ground. A right which the defendant has already acquired is one thing, and a mere right to raise the plea is quite another. Confusion is apt to arise when these two entirely different ideas are mixed up. The plaintiff shall not be allowed to add any new relief by way of an amendment which on account of the efflux of time he could not claim at that time, but the plaintiff's request to plead waiver in his suit is neither a new relief nor it has the effect of depriving the defendant of any right already acquired by him. The nature of the suit is not in the least altered thereby. In fact the plaintiff is trying by this amendment to explain that his suit was within time, and such an amendment is permissible at any stage. If the plaintiff has made a mistake in stating the date of payment of money and then by amendment requests to correct the same, he by doing so is not in any way depriving the defendant of any right whatsoever which he had so far acquired. A mistake of fact of this nature can always be corrected in pleadings by any party without injuring any right of his adversary. It would clearly be against the principle of amendment laid down in O. VI, r. 17 of the Civil P. C., to refuse an amendment in respect of a bona fide mistake regarding the mere date of any transaction.

A default clause contained in an instalment bond gave the plaintiffs a right to recover the whole amount in the event of failure of any one instalment. On default of the third instalment plaintiffs sued on the bond and originally stated in the plaint that the first two instalments were paid on due dates but on defendants' objection as to the dates of payment the plaintiffs sought to amend the plaint by mentioning the real dates on which both the instalments were actually received. In respect of the first instalment the due date did not coincide with the actual date of payment, therefore by way of explanation in this connection the plaintiffs pleaded that an acceptance by them of the first overdue instalment amounted to a waiver of their right to sue for the whole amount:

Held, that the plaintiffs had full right to amend the plaint and plead a waiver of their right to sue. That the amendment did not in any way interfere with the defendant's right to plead limitation. MADAN MOHANLAL v. ZAHIRUDDIN Bhop. 809 not a transferee believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property cannot be the subject of any hard and fast rules but should be decided on the merits according to the circumstances of each case.

What constitutes good faith is a question of fact to be inferred from the circumstances of each case; failure to make due enquiry does not constitute good faith. The vendee acts in good faith, i. e., under the honest belief that he has secured good title to the property in question, and is the rightful owner thereof, and for this belief there must be some reasonable grounds such as would lead a man of ordinary prudence to entertain it. The belief in good faith includes not only acting honestly but includes due enquiry.

The existence of the right of pre-emption is well-known in the Province of Oudh, and it is a legitimate presumption to hold that the vendee would know of the existence of it. Where the vendee is not co-sharers in the village and even if he does not know all the details of the law of pre-emption he would certainly know that every co-sharer in the village would have the right of pre-emption and the vendee has not shown that he took any step whatsoever to assure himself that co-sharers would not pre-empt and makes improvements in property without waiting for the limitation for pre-emption to expire, he cannot be granted compensation, in a suit for pre-emption against him. SHUBRATAN v. SHABIR ALI Oudh 317

Oudh—Superior proprietor creating under-proprietary right and selling it to person who is already proprietor and under-proprietor—Co-sharer in the mahal, if can pre-empt.

A superior proprietor created an under-proprietary right which he sold to a person who was already a proprietor and also an under-proprietor. A pre-emption suit was brought by the plaintiff on the ground that he was a co-sharer in the mahal concerned and the defence of the vendees was that under the Oudh Laws Act being under-proprietors they came before a superior-proprietor and he could not, therefore, pre-empt a sale of under-proprietary rights made in their favour:

Held, that the transaction could not be called a sale of a superior proprietary right. The vendor's share in the proprietary khewat would in no way be modified by the fact that he had created an under-proprietary right. The only change in the khewat would be in the under-proprietary khewat. Cases like this could not be distinguished from sales of a prior existing under-proprietary right and consequently the vendees had a preferential right to the would-be pre-emptor and his suit must fail. KAZIM HUSAIN v. MAHFUZ ALI Oudh 843

Suit for—Exception to validity of items of consideration which have in fact changed hands, if can be taken—Vendee having influence over vendor—Burden of proving reality of consideration.

The right of pre-emption is a right of substitution for the buyer and it is not open to a plaintiff in a pre-emption suit, while claiming to enforce this right of substitution, to take exception to the validity of the items of sale consideration when, as a matter of fact, those items of consideration have changed hands.

Where therefore, the vendor who had executed a mortgage during his minority in favour of the vendees, agrees on attaining majority at the time of the sale to pay off the mortgage debt and the vendees agree to set off that amount out of the total sale consideration entered in the sale deed, the transaction is perfectly legal and its legality cannot be impugned either by the vendor or the pre-emptor.

The fact that the vendees had some influence over the vendor is an additional circumstance tending to cast doubt on the genuineness of the amount of consideration as entered in the sale deed. That being so, the burden of proving that the ostensible consideration was the real consideration is on the vendees. ANANT RAI v. BHAGWAN RAI All. 4 —Proviso to s. 7, scope and application.

There is nothing in Proviso to s. 7 limiting its application only when the third party has been actually examined under s. 36. But its application is restricted to the two matters arising under sub-ss. (4) and (5) of s. 36, that is, under sub-s. (4) the question whether the third party is indebted to the insolvent, or under sub-s. (5) the question whether the third party is in possession of property belonging to the insolvent. Unless all parties agree, if such indebtedness or such possession is denied by the third party, the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court to try the matter is, wholly excluded, and it does not matter whether the denial has been made in the course of examination under s. 36 or at any other time. But sub-s. (5) of s. 36 has in view only the case of property admittedly belonging to the insolvent, and the object of the sub-section is to enable the Official Assignee to discover its whereabouts; it relates to possession only and not to title. Where the ownership of, or title to the property, is in dispute this sub-section has no application, and consequently the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court under s. 7 is not barred in such cases by the proviso to the section. *T. Section 37 (1), Prov. Insol. Act does not allow an Insolvency Court on annulling an insolvency to proceed to distribute the assets of the insolvent among any of the creditors. The distribution of assets is a proceeding in insolvency, and by annulling the insolvency it means that the Court will not proceed with the insolvency. Therefore, the course open to the Court is either to return the property to the insolvent on condition that he furnishes security which will make it available to the creditors or for some other reason the Court may direct the property of the insolvent in the hands of the Receiver to vest in a certain person. The words "to vest in such person" do not mean distribution of assets among the creditors. RAM NATH v. GOBIND PRASAD Oudh 729

ss. 38, 39, 40, 42—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court to impose penalty on insolvent in shape of suspension from practice—Suspension is governed by High Court Rules—Order of Court cannot extend their scope—Application for discharge—Court must consider provisions in s. 42 together with Receiver's report—Agreement between parties—Procedure in s. 38 must be followed.

According to the rules of the Lahore High Court, the license of an insolvent legal practitioner is only suspended till his discharge—whether absolute or conditional. An Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to impose a penalty on the insolvent in the shape of suspension from practice. The suspension is the result of the rules framed by the High Court and the scope of the rules cannot be extended either by the agreement of the parties or by the order of the Insolvency Court.

When the application for discharge of an insolvent Advocate came up for hearing, he stated that he was prepared to deposit with the Official Receiver Rs. 20 per mensem till his creditors got eight annas in the rupee and that in default of any payment, he should be disallowed to practise as an Advocate. This was agreed to by the Official Receiver and the Counsel representing creditors and on the basis of this agreement the Court passed an order, granting a conditional discharge and for six years, subject to the condition that the insolvent should deposit a sum of Rs. 20 with the Official Receiver every month. It was also ordered that in case of default he would be liable to suspension of practice as provided by the High Court Rules and Orders. The proved debts amounted only to Rs. 181-8-0.

Held, that the Court was dealing not with an application under s. 28, Prov. Insol. Act, but with the insolvent's application for discharge and for that purpose the Court was bound to consider the matters laid down in s. 42, along with the report of the Receiver and then decide what order was appropriate in the circumstances of the case. The order passed was not in accordance with law and was not fair to the parties. The order of the Court purported to be based on the agreement between the parties but the procedure laid down for a "composition" or "scheme of arrangement" in s. 38, was not followed. The proper order to pass would have been to annul the adjudication and if the insolvent had then failed to carry out the terms of the compromise he would have been liable to be re-adjudged insolvent; vide ss. 39 and

Sub-s. (2) of s. 60, Prov. Insol Act is intended to supplement s. 28, and to save the operation of enactments prohibiting execution of decrees or orders against the immovable property of the insolvent even after the property has vested in the Receiver and must be held to apply to a sale by the Receiver. Section 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act applies to a sale by the Receiver of the land belonging to an insolvent who is a member of a notified agricultural tribe as the sale is held in enforcement of an order of adjudication. While applying s. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the status of the insolvent at the time of the sale of the property must be taken into consideration, in the same way as it is in execution of decrees. The insolvent's acquiring the status of a member of an agricultural tribe after the adjudication, does not prevent the operation of sub-s. (2) of s. 60 at the time of sale of the property. Section 16, Punjab Alienation Act, does not prohibit the temporary alienation of such land, and it is therefore open to the Receiver to arrange for the temporary alienation of the land of the insolvents according to law. Provincial Small Cause Courts Act—conold.

Article 3, Sch. II, Small Cause Courts Act, operates to take out of the purview of Small Cause Courts claims arising out of an act or order purporting to be done by an officer of Govt. in his official capacity, and no distinction arises from the fact that such an order, which is actually made by an officer of Govt. in his official capacity, might have been made by a private person in his private capacity.

The applicant tendered for the supply of grass to the jails. He submitted the tender in the prescribed form with the cash certificate for Rs. 500 to the Inspector-General of Prisons, and the tender was accepted. Under the terms, however, it was a condition of the acceptance of tenders that the tenderer should execute an agreement embodying the conditions of contract, a copy of which was annexed to the tender, and deposit the security mentioned in the said conditions within such time as might be allowed by the Inspector-General of Prisons. In the event of the tenderer's refusing or failing to execute the agreement or to deposit the security within the said time, the Inspector-General was to be at liberty to cancel the acceptance of the tender and to forfeit the earnest money deposited by the tenderers. The tenderer failed to execute the agreement within the time fixed by the Inspector-General, and the Inspector-General cancelled the acceptance of the tender and ordered forfeiture of the security money. In consequence the tenderer instituted a suit against the Secretary of State for India praying for a decree for Rs. 322 by way of damages and for an order to the defendant to return the said postal cash certificate. The suit was instituted in the Court of Small Causes:

Held, that the very essence of the suit was that it was a claim founded on the allegation that the Inspector-General of Prisons was not entitled to cancel the acceptance or at any rate forfeit the security money and that the U. P. Govt. was liable for damages arising out of other consequences of that act. The suit was therefore excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes under Art. 3, Sch. II, Prov. Small Cause Courts Act.

Held, also that the power of the High Court under s. 25 of the Act being very wide, the applicant should be allowed by it an opportunity of having his suit properly determined by a competent Court. SITAL PRASAD NIGAM v. THE UNITED PROVINCES Oudh 209

A person who was disinherited by his father was adjudged insolvent and the Official Receiver took possession of the property in dispute as belonging to the insolvent. The plaintiffs preferred an objection in the Insolvency Court on the ground that the property in dispute had been bequeathed to them by insolvent's father who was their grandfather. This objection was dismissed by the Insolvency Court. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted a declaratory suit to the effect that the property in dispute was owned and possessed by them, that it did not belong to insolvent, and that it was not liable to attachment and sale in the insolvency proceedings against him. The creditors of the insolvent were also made defendants in the case. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that the will relied upon by the plaintiffs was never executed by the insolvent's father, that the property in dispute was ancestral, and that deceased was not entitled to will it away in favour of the plaintiffs according to custom :

Held, that s. 6, Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act had no applicability to the facts of the case as the Official Receiver had not instituted any suit to contest an alienation of ancestral immovable property made by the insolvent's father. The Official Receiver as the representative of the insolvent was fully entitled to resist the suit of the plaintiffs on the ground that the will made by the deceased in their favour was not valid. RADHA KISHAN v. So far as the Province of Punjab is concerned, under s. 5, Punjab Laws Act, 1872, the primary rule for decision in matters of succession is custom, which may be found to govern the parties, but it is for those who allege that there is such a custom to establish it. Thus, it is at least necessary for a Hindu convert to Christianity to allege and to prove that there is any custom of adoption among the Christian community in the Punjab, or in any section of that community, before any question as to whether any such adoption confers on the alleged adopted boy the same rights as an adoption in Hindu Law confers on him, can be considered. RANBIR KARAM SINGH v. When a final mortgage decree has been passed the document declaring the mortgagee's rights in the mortgaged property is the decree itself and not the mortgage deed. A mortgage decree must therefore be regarded as immovable property and its assignment falls under s. 17 (1) (e), Reg. There is no effective registration unless the deed of mortgage relates to land situate in the sub-district in which the deed is registered. It is not sufficient that the land mentioned in the sale or the mortgage deed exists. The document cannot be said to relate to land in a registration district unless it was the intention of the parties that such land, even if it exists, should in a sale deed be transferred or in a mortgage deed form part of the security.

Where the land certainly existed in Sub-Division where the deed was registered but the insertion of it in the mortgage deed gave the mortgagee no security whatsoever and the land being undefined could not effectually form part of the security, and on the evidence it was clear that it was never intended to form part of such security :

Held, that the registration of this mortgage deed must be held to be invalid.

Held, also that the mortgagor could raise this question of want of valid registration though he was a party to the fraud on the registration laws.

Held, further that there was nothing in s. 92 of the Evi. Act, to render evidence of the intention of the parties inadmissible. It was not evidence which varied the terms of the written document as between the parties and their representatives. It was evidence which went to show that the document did not relate to land within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar who registered it. Further, it might well be said that evidence of this kind was evidence which tended to render the document invalid and such was admissible under the first proviso to s. 92 of the Evi. Act.

Held, still further that it could not be held that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to register this sale deed by reason of the insufficiency of the description of the land situate. The Legislature intended that such errors or defects should be classed under the general words "defect in procedure" in s. 87 of the Act, so that innocent and ignorant persons should not be deprived of their property through any error or inadvertence of a public officer, on whom they would naturally place reliance. ss. 30 (1), 87—Sub-Registrar at one place having no jurisdiction wrongly accepting and registering document—District Registrar can re-register it himself—His directing registration of document by Sub-Registrar having jurisdiction is irregularity curable by s. 87.

The discretion conferred by s. 30 (1), Reg. Act is wide and unfettered. It is not controlled, in so far as representation of a document which has been accepted and duly registered in a wrong place by either s. 32 or s. 34 or by any other provision of Part VI, or any other part. These provisions deal with initial presentation and do not refer to representation of a document which has been accepted for registration and duly registered in the wrong place through a mistake of the registering authorities for which the parties were not responsible. These sections no more impose a time-limit or any other restriction upon representation. The discretion should not be lightly exercised. It should not be exercised at all when there is gross negligence, or carelessness or fraud.

Where a Sub-Registrar of a sub-district having no jurisdiction to accept for registration a document, has wrongly accepted and duly registered it, the District Registrar having control over such Sub-Registrar and the Sub-Registrar by whom the document ought to have been registered, can remedy the wrong and register the document. If instead of registering it himself he directs the latter Sub-Registrar to register it, it is mere irregularity curable by s. 87. SUGANMAL v. UMRAOBI Nag. 295

It is a well-known principle that where a statute creates a duty or imposes a liability, and prescribes a specific remedy in case of neglect to perform the duty or discharge the liability, no remedy can be taken but the particular remedy prescribed by the statute. The Legislature intended that the sole remedy open to those who were aggrieved by a decision or order passed by an Officer of Customs under the Sea Customs Act, should be the appeal to the Chief Customs Authority provided by s. 188. The order passed by the Governor-General in Council under s. 191 of the Act can in no case, be questioned in the Civil Courts, except possibly orders which while purporting to be made under it are clearly outside it. Sedition—Colony of Gold Coast—Incitement to violence, if necessary ingredient.

The elaborate structure of s. 330, Criminal Code (Colony of Gold Coast) (now s. 326 of the Criminal Code of 1936 Revision) suggests that it was intended to contain as far as possible a full and complete statement of the law of sedition in the Colony. It must therefore be construed in its application to the facts of the case free from any glosses or interpolations derived from any expositions however authoritative of the Law of England or of Scotland.

There is nothing in the section to suggest that unless the words complained of were themselves of such a nature as to be likely to incite to violence, and unless there was positive extrinsic evidence of seditious intention the prosecution for sedition would not succeed. Nowhere in the section is there anything to support the view that incitement to violence is a necessary ingredient of the crime of sedition. Violence may well be, and no doubt often is, the result of wild and ill-considered words, but the Code does not require proof from the words themselves of any intention to produce such a result. *ISAAC THEOPHILUS AKKUNNA WALLACE-JOHNSON v. Passing off action—English precedents, value of—Plaintiff acquiring right to certain trade mark in respect of smoking tobacco and cigarettes—Defendant using trade mark not unlike plaintiff in respect of chewing tobacco—Plaintiff, if can maintain action, in the absence of evidence as to deception.

In the matter of infringement of trade marks conditions peculiar to India must be borne in mind in applying any doctrine of English Law, and English decisions which turn or partly turn on questions of fact—as do most cases of common law trade marks and passing-off—can only be applied with care and circumspection. The general principle, founded as it is on justice and equity, is the same in both countries. No man, is entitled to represent his goods as being the goods of another man; and no man is permitted to use any mark, sign or symbol, device or means, whereby without making a direct false representation himself to a purchaser who purchases from him, he enables such purchaser to tell a lie or to make a false representation to somebody else who is the ultimate purchaser.

There can obviously be no monopoly in the use of the trade mark. A manufacturer of cigarettes under an undoubted trade mark such as an animal, or any other device, cannot legally object to the use of the identical mark on say, hats, or soap, for the simple reason that purchasers of any of the latter kinds of goods could not reasonably suppose, even if they were well acquainted with the mark as used on cigarettes, that its use on hats or soap denoted that these goods were manufactured or marketed by the cigarette manufacturer. Those would be simple cases, but some much more difficult ones can be suggested. If a manufacturer of a special kind of smoking tobacco under a trademark seeks to restrain the use of it on cigars, or on a very different kind of smoking tobacco, or on cigarettes, or on snuff, or on chewing tobacco, or on tobacco in some form sold for use as a weed killer—all these things being made of tobacco—questions, sometimes of great difficulty, may arise. It is, however, very important to observe that each of these questions will be a question of fact to be decided on the evidence adduced. The vital element in such a case is the probability of deception. This may depend on a number of matters as well as the question of similarity of the marks or of the get-up. Witnesses can be called to prove the circumstances and the places in which the articles are sold, the classes of persons who buy them, and whether they include persons who are illiterate or ignorant or the reverse, the manner in which the public are accustomed to ask for the articles, and any other matters which will assist the Court to decide whether deception is probable. Evidence of actual deception may be available and if available may be very valuable. There is no such person as an expert in human nature, and it is now well settled that a witness cannot be called to say that it is likely that purchasers of the goods will be deceived. This can only be a matter of opinion formed after the dispute has arisen and too often without any judicial consideration of the opposing contentions. On the other hand a person who is accustomed to buy the articles in question may be called to say that he would himself be deceived, and cross-examination will often show what weight should be attached to such a statement:

Held, that the appellants had acquired a proprietary right in respect of their elephant trade mark with reference to their cigarettes and Virginia Bird's Eye tobacco. Right was not confined only to the sale of the same kind of cigarettes and of Virginia Bird's Eye tobacco; for, in the absence of strong evidence to the contrary, such a mark would ordinarily extend to protect goods so similar in kind to the goods actually put upon the market by the trader in connection with the trade mark that it was an almost inevitable inference that such goods would be manufactured or marketed by the trader. In other words the probability of deception in the case of goods of a closely similar kind to those actually marketed by the appellant would be proved in the course of establishing the trade mark. But no such inference could be made in the absence of evidence in the case as regards the respondent's goods, since the chewing tobacco he sold differed widely in appearance and in use from the goods sold by the appellant.

Held, also that much importance could not be attached to the fact that the appellants were unable to call evidence of a actual deception, due to the fact that the procuring of evidence of probability of deception is often a difficult and troublesome task. On the other hand the appellants had to establish their case, and in the complete absence of evidence on the point it must be held that they failed to do so. THOMAS BEAR & SONS (INDIA) LTD. v. PRAYAG NARAIN PC 658

Trade-mark—concl'd.

— Passing off action—Test of comparison, value of.

It is not an answer to the claim of a trader who has established, the right to a trade mark (e. g., a device or a fancy word) to say that, apart from the device or the word, the labels or containers of the rival trade are very different from those of the trade mark owner. It cannot be said that the differences in get-up are immaterial; for they must inevitably form an element in considering the question of probability of deception by the use of the mark.

The test of comparison of the marks side by side is not a sound one, since a purchaser will seldom have the two marks actually before him when he makes his purchase; and marks with many differences may yet have an element of similarity which will cause deception, more especially if the goods are in practice asked for by a name which denotes the mark or the device on it. THOMAS BEAR & SONS (INDIA) LTD. v. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 3—"Immovable property" includes benefits to arise out of land—Assignment of rents and profits of land can be made only by registered instrument.

Immovable property is not defined in the T. P. Act, which merely says that it does not include standing timber, growing crops or grass; but it is defined in s. 2, sub-s. 29, General Clauses Act, and this definition applies to transfers of property. According to this definition "immovable property" shall include land, and benefits to arise out of land. Hence the assignment of rents and profits of the land can only be made by a registered instrument. DAW YON v. U MIN SIN Rang. 762 — ss. 3, 6—Defendant borrowing money from plaintiff to carry on money suit filed by him against X and executing mortgage in plaintiff's favour assigning decree that would be passed in his suit—Decree passed—Suit by plaintiff for mere declaration that he was entitled to recover his dues out of amount payable under decree—There was held transfer of actionable claim and not of mere right to sue—Suit held not bad under s. 42, Specific Relief Act.

An assignment of future or non-existing property is quite valid and the transfer becomes operative as soon as the property comes into existence.

Defendant borrowed money from the plaintiff aggregating to Rs 1,500, to carry on a money suit instituted by him against X and he executed a mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiff assigning by way of security the decree that would be passed in the money suit instituted by him. The stipulation was that the plaintiff would be entitled to realize out of the decretal amount the sum of Rs. 1,500 due to him together with interest at the rate mentioned in the document. Subsequently a decree was passed in favour of defendant in the money suit for a certain sum. On appeal this sum was reduced. The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that on the strength of the mortgage bond he was entitled to have his dues realized out of the amount payable under the decree:

Held, that what was transferred was the claim to a debt and as such would come within the definition of 'actionable claim' as given in s. 3, T. P. Act. The mere fact that the claim was reduced by the Court did not make, any difference. What was transferred was not a mere right to sue:

Held, also that the plaintiff was an assignee of the decree for the purpose of realizing the amount due on the mortgage bond and was competent under the terms of the bond itself to institute proceedings for recovery of the amount.

Held, further that all that the plaintiff could want possibly was a declaration that he was an assignee of the decree, and if he got a declaration it would be open to him to apply for execution of the decree under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. No other consequential reliefs, by way of injunction or otherwise could or should have been prayed for by the plaintiff in the suit and the suit for mere declaration without consequential relief was not bad, under s. 42, Specific Relief Act. PURNA CHANDRA BHOWMIK v. Held, that in the circumstances when the lower Appellate Court ordered that parties should bear their own costs by which order the pre-emption decree of the trial Court was varied, it was impossible to say that in its order as to costs Court did not judicially exercise the discretion vested on him. SHUBRATAN v. s. 52—Subsequent mortgagee in execution of his decree for sale obtained on his mortgage purchasing property himself and suing for possession transferee pendente lite—Whether entitled to unconditional possession—Liability to reimburse transferee in respect of prior mortgages redeemed by him.

It may be assumed that a transfer in contravention of the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, is only voidable and not void, but even then there is no analogy between a suit for possession by a decree-holder against a transferee pendente lite and a suit by Hindu reversioner for possession of property alienated by a widow. Even though s. 52 does not operate to annul a transfer pendente lite it renders the transfer subservient to the rights of the parties to the action as determined by the judgment or decree passed in the action. In other words, unlike a transfer by a Hindu widow there is a statutory prohibition against transfers pendente lite so as to affect the right of either party to the action.

Consequently where a subsequent mortgagee who in execution of a decree for sale obtained on the basis of the subsequent mortgage has the mortgaged property, brings a suit for possession against a usufructuary mortgagee pendente lite who redeemed certain prior mortgages, the usufructuary mortgagee-decree-holder is entitled to an order for possession of the property. In this matter in another way, he is, in view of provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, entitled to possession of usufructuary mortgage executed pendente lite transferee cannot, therefore, rely on the fact that he redeemed earlier mortgages with the proceeds of the usufructuary mortgage. HAR PRASAD RAM

A mortgagor sold a portion of the mortgaged property to M for certain amount a portion of which was to be paid by M to the mortgagee. One day the sale and got a decree on payment of purchase money. He then transferred the property to R. Neither M nor F nor R paid the mortgage. The mortgagor was the sum and therefore sued for recovery. He claimed a decree against R as he was on the property on the basis of the mortgage. He also claimed a decree against F as R had notice of the previous mortgage and was not aware that the mortgage was unpaid till the property was purchased.

Held, that the principle of s. 55 (4) did not apply to R. The mortgagor was entitled to a decree against R and a decree against F for the property in his hands. JIWAN v. KESARI for the payment to the latter of the money retained in the vendee's hands, then that money may cease to be a part of the unpaid purchase price and may become a debt payable only to the creditor in respect of which there can obviously be no occasion for a lien in favour of the vendor. But when there is no privity between the vendee and the creditor who is to be paid off, the money in the hands of the vendee, whatever be the purpose for which it is retained remains in fact money at the disposition of the vendor, who can presumably countermand the instructions given to the vendee as to the disposal of that fund. It is, therefore, the vendor's money in respect of which he is entitled to the statutory lien. RAMAKRISHNA v. PANGHAMAL NARASIMHA KAMATH Mad. 426

ss. 58, 63, 63-A, 72—Deed of mortgage with possession providing that mortgagees should effect repairs on failure of mortgagor if property fell into ruins and mortgagees sustained loss in income of rent—Repairs not shown to be made after property fell into ruins—No loss of income proved—Repairs in nature of improvements—Mortgagees held not entitled to credit for sums spent in repairs.

A mortgagee is entitled to treat interest due under a mortgage as a charge upon the mortgaged property in the absence of any contract to the contrary. Although a mortgage-deed provides that the principal mortgage money, as well as interest and compound interest thereon has to be paid, yet if the repairs effected came within the T. P. Act or within the document, the cost thereof would under the same principle come under the expression "principal mortgage money" and can be added to the principal mortgage money.

Under a deed of mortgage with possession repairs were to be done by the mortgagor and the only power given to the mortgagees, in the event of the mortgagor not effecting repairs was that in case the property fell into ruins or was destroyed on account of some unexpected calamity or want of repairs and the mortgagees sustained a loss in their income of rent on that account, then the mortgagees could effect repairs from their own pocket after giving the mortgagor notice and they could charge interest on these repairs. It was not claimed that any repairs were done by the mortgagees after the property had fallen into ruins or had been destroyed. There was nothing to prove any loss of income from rent and the property was never in ruins or destroyed. On the contrary the work done, was more in the nature of improvements calculated to bring in increased rent. None of them were proved to have been necessary within the meaning of s. 72 or s. 63-A, T. P. Act:

Held, that the mortgagees were not entitled to credit for the sum spent by them in effecting the repairs. SURAJ MAL v. CHANDER BHAN Lah. 705

An amendment will not in general have any retrospective effect unless it is specifically provided that the amendment is to have a retrospective effect. There is nothing in the amendment of s. 84, T. P. Act, which enacts that that amendment is in any way to be retrospective.

A mortgagor executed a subsequent mortgage of the same property in favour of another. The subsequent mortgagees deposited the amount of the earlier mortgage in Court to be payable to the party entitled to it. After this deposit there was a dispute between rival claimants regarding the title to the estate of the earlier mortgagee. One of the claimants made an application showing his willingness to hand over deposit to the depositor pending the litigation regarding title to the estate of the earlier mortgagee. When the proceedings under s. 83, T. P. Act, came to an end, the depositor (subsequent mortgagee) withdrew the deposit but subsequently redeposited it in the Court in which litigation regarding title to the estate of the earlier mortgagee was instituted:

Trust—Charitable trust—Language should be clear—General charitable intention shown but particular charitable purpose indicated failing—General charitable intention will be given effect to.

Every trust must be expressed in sufficiently clear language to enable the Court to ascertain what are its purpose and object. This is so under English Law and also under s. 6, Trusts Act, and the principle applies to charitable trusts. The test must ultimately be whether, if the Court be called upon to administer the trust, the Court would be able to do so.

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. 2, Proviso, ss. 3, 30—Joint Hindu family—Each member, if can apply for relief under s. 30—Father and son executing mortgage—Father alone entered in revenue papers as proprietor—Suit on mortgage—Father if entitled to relief under ss. 30 and 3—Benefit, if can be extended to son.

Explanation 2, sub-s. 2, s. 2 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act, makes it clear that each member of a joint Hindu family cannot claim the benefits conferred by s. 5 of the Act, or by s. 30 which is one of the sections in Chap. IV. For the purposes of applications under s. 30 the person, recorded as owner or the person paying revenue, etc. is the only person who can apply. Normally such a person in a joint Hindu family would be the karta.

Father and son who were members of a joint Hindu family executed a mortgage. The family possessed ancestral property, the revenue of which did not exceed Rs. 1,000. In the revenue papers the father alone was recorded as proprietor. It was contended by both the father and the son, in a suit against them on the mortgage that they were entitled to instalments and reduction of interest.

Held, that the Proviso applied only to those cases where an agriculturist joins a non-agriculturist in any transaction of loan. The son could not be regarded as non-agriculturist so as to invite the application of the proviso. Consequently the father in joining the son in executing the mortgage could not be said to have forfeited his right to claim relief under ss. 3 and 30.

The words "refuses to grant instalments" in s. 5, U. P. Agri. Relief Act are unqualified. They cover cases of refusal on the ground that the applicant is not an agriculturist or does not fulfil the requirements laid down by s. 8 of the Act. The issue whether the applicant is an agriculturist is not an incidental issue or an issue the decision of which alone would determine the jurisdiction of the Court to grant instalments. The Court passing the decree alone has jurisdiction to convert it into a decree for instalments and where in the exercise of that jurisdiction it has refused to grant instalments on the finding that the applicants are not agriculturists, s. 5 (2) has application to such a case and when an appeal has been preferred under s. 5 (2) the decision of the Appellate Court confirming that of the trial Court is final and no revision lies. *SHANTI SAROOP v. s. 12—Tenant mortgaging his holding—S. 12, if applies—Proper remedy of tenant.

In the case of mortgages which are void by reason of being against any enactment, the mortgagee is not entitled to get back his money except when any portion of the consideration forms an independent transaction. The mortgage of an agricultural holding in contravention of the provisions of the Rent Law is void ab initio. Hence, a statutory tenant who has made a mortgage of his holding cannot avail himself of the provisions of s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act but his remedy lies in a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court. SANT RAM v. PUTTI LAL Oudh 434

U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), s. 8 (d), Proviso (a)—"Gross annual profits"—Land revenue if should be deducted—View of Local Government, if, can be questioned.

In considering the way in which land revenue is regarded in India no comparison with tenures in England is of much (if any) assistance. Its universality, its quantum, and the tendency of the Indian outlook to regard the Govt. as a sharer in all the produce of the land are matters of importance.

In calculating the gross annual profits of the property under s. 8 (d), Proviso (a), U. P. Court of Wards Act, 1912, land revenue must be deducted, but no allowance for any expenses of estate management must be made.

However carefully the liberty of the subject has to be guarded, not only is there sound sense in making the decision of the Local Govt. final but it has also to be remembered that a right construction of the Court of Wards Act can only be attained if its whole scope and object together with an analysis of its wording and the circumstances in which it is enacted are taken into consideration. From an examination of the Act the conclusion is inevitable that owing to the provisions of ss. 11 and 13 of the Act no resort to the Court is left under s. 8 to challenge the view of the Local Govt. as to the meaning of "gross annual profits." *BHAGWAN BAKSH SINGH v. The mere fact that in the opinion of the Judge the tax is unjust and would operate harshly, so far, at any rate, as Govt. servants residing only for certain periods within the jurisdiction of the District Board in question are concerned does not justify the dismissal of the suit for the recovery of a certain sum alleged to be due from the defendant as "tax on circumstances and property" for a certain number of years. The provisions laid down in ss. 128 and 131 of the U. P. District Boards Act make it perfectly clear that the Judge is not right in adverting to these considerations and in basing his judgment upon them.

The tax on "circumstances and property" which the District Board imposes is not income-tax. The residence within the rural area is by itself sufficient to bring a person within the purview of this tax. The imposition of such tax upon a person who pays Section 9 (5), U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, applies to joint and several debt.

The more general sense should be given to the term "joint debt" and whatever injury may thereby be done to the rights of creditors under the general law the intention of this Act is to limit the rights of creditors even in the case of debtors who are not entitled to the protection of the Act by giving to the Special Judge deciding claims under that Act an exclusive jurisdiction to apportion the liability under joint debts as between those debtors who have applied under the Act and those who have not. Whatever may be the position in regard to the "institution" of suits against non-applicant joint debtors in the ordinary Civil Courts, those suits cannot go forward unless and until the Special Judge has exercised his special jurisdiction to distribute the amount of the debts. Sub-section (5) (b) of s. 9 has been a part of the Act from the very beginning and the wording of that sub-section makes it clear that in the ordinary Civil Courts a creditor can only recover from a non-applicant joint debtor such amount as may be determined by the Special Judge to be due by him. *M. Where a previous suit under s. 111, U. P. Land Revenue Act filed within three months of the order of the Revenue Court is withdrawn with the permission of the Court, a second suit, even if filed beyond three months from the order of the Revenue Court is not time-barred. *SUMMER CHAND v. that sale was void, if maintainable.

The general presumption is against an intention to disturb the established state of the law, or to interfere with the vested rights of subjects, and there is a strong leaning against so construing a statute as thereby to oust or restrict the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. In the provision that 'no person shall institute a suit' in s. 233 (m), U. P. Land Revenue Act the Legislature had in contemplation the class of persons to whom the Act in its general bearing is applicable; that is, to share-holders liable to pay Govt. Revenue and not to strangers outside this body. It was not intended to protect the Govt. against claims in respect of illegal acts done to the detriment of persons who are under no liability to pay Govt. Revenue. It was merely intended to protect the Govt. against claims of members of the revenue paying class.

A Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record and as against such persons, the decrees or sales under them are void without any proceedings to set them aside. It would be a travesty of justice to hold that a minor whose property is being wrongly sold by the revenue authorities has no remedy left to him if he does not apply to the Commissioner under s. 173 of the Land Revenue Act, specially when the sale was conducted with material irregularity and in complete disregard of the provisions of ss. 163 and 164 of the Land Revenue Act. A suit therefore, for declaration that the property sold belongs to him and that the sale is consequently void and ineffective is not barred by the provisions of s. 233 (m). *SAR NARAIN v. The word 'import' literally means 'carried into' or 'brought into.' When goods are received by a consignee and are brought by him into the municipal limits, he imports them within the meaning of the U. P. Municipalities Act and of the Rules framed under the Act. The words "imported or brought into" cannot be so interpreted as to mean that only those goods can be said to have been imported or brought into the municipal limits of a town which are either kept, consumed or sold by the consignee of the goods within those municipal limits. *HARDWARI MAL HARNATH DAS FIRM v. U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act (VI of 1912), s. 18—Expression "in which ghee is manufactured" applies to manufactory, shop or place.

The words "in which ghee is manufactured" in s. 18 apply to the three previous things mentioned that is "manufactory, shop or place." If this were not so, then it would be an offence to keep any substance to be used for the adulteration of such ghee in any kind of a factory or any kind of a shop. That cannot be what was intended by the Legislature, but the Legislature did intend that the manufactory or the shop were those in which ghee was manufactured. OHHANGA MAL v. EMPEROR All. 855

s. 18—Point that ghee is not manufactured at shop cannot be taken for first time in revision. In the case of a prosecution under s. 18, it is for the accused to take the plea that his shop, is not such a manufactory, shop, or place in which ghee is manufactured, under s. 242, Criminal P. O., in the trial Court. If he fails to do this, he cannot raise it for the first time in revision. OHHANGA MAL v. EMPEROR All. 855

s. 18—Prosecution under—Previous conviction, if can be shown.

In the case of a prosecution under s. 18, U. P. Prev. of Adulteration Act previous conviction for selling adulterated ghee would be relevant to show intention. OHHANGA MAL v. EMPEROR All. 855

Vendor and purchaser—Breach of contract—Held vendors and not vendee liable for breach.

Vendors made an offer to the vendee to execute a deed of transfer of their mortgagee rights. The offer, however, was not bona fide. One of the vendors who by separate agreement had covenanted to transfer his share in the mortgagee rights to the vendee, if called upon, did not carry out his part of the agreement:

Held, that the vendee and not the vendors committed the breach of the contract. JAGGO BAI v. HARIHAR PRASAD SINGH All. 501

Vendor and vendee—Specific performance—

Alternative claim for refund—Claim by vendee for specific performance or in alternative for refund of purchase money—Withdrawal of former claim—Vendee, if can claim refund.

Where upon a breach of contract by the vendors the vendee claims a decree for specific performance or in the alternative a refund with interest of the amount of the purchase price paid by him but withdraws during the pendency of the suit his claim for specific performance and the vendors do not suffer from the suit, the vendee is not debarred from claiming the refund as the claim seeks only resitutio in integrum and is not strictly one of damages. *JAGGO BAI v. Whipping Act (IV of 1909), s. 3—Offence under s. 380, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Sentence of whipping, if can be substituted for order of detention in Borstal School passed by trial Court.

In a case of an offence under s. 380, I. P. O., a Magistrate has two alternatives before him. He may send an offender to prison or in lieu thereof, he may either cause him to be whipped or send him to Borstal; but the power to order a person to be whipped is only in lieu of another punishment under the Code and once an order of detention in Borstal has been passed there is no power to alter this order to a sentence of whipping. Where a Magistrate has ordered detention in Borstal School of an offender, the Sessions Judge has no power to substitute for it a sentence of whipping as that would be enhancing the sentence. *THE KING v. Will. SEE HINDU LAW

Construction. SEE HINDU LAW—ADOPTION

Construction—Absolute estate—Widow held made absolute owner of property.

A testator by his will made his wife the "exclusive owner" of a certain property. She was to have "all kinds of powers to deal with the property aforesaid. She shall be considered full owner." But towards the end of the will there was a provision that "after the death of my wife, whatever property remains shall be owned by the sons of my brother who shall have no connection or concern therewith. Besides, my wife, shall not be entitled to sell immovable property. The sons of my brother shall also have no such right"

Held, that the prohibition against selling must be disregarded as repugnant to the absolute gift to the wife and that she was made the absolute owner of the property. JAGAT SINGH v. SANGAT SINGH P C 440

Construction—Bequest to further principles of particular parties, whether charitable—Clause in will handing over residue to certain person to be spent by him for political uplift of India—Clause held constituted trust which being not for charitable purpose and being also vague was invalid.

Gifts or bequests for furthering the principles of particular political parties are not charitable bequests.

After paying certain legacies, the testator by his will directed the residue of the assets to be handed over to certain person to be spent by him or by his nominee for the political uplift of India and preferably for publicity work on behalf of India's cause in other countries:

Held, (1) that the words constituted a trust, and that there was no beneficial gift to the donee;

(2) that the trust was not for general or specific charitable purpose;

(3) that the trust being vague could not be enforced. Hence it was invalid. There was consequently an intestacy in respect of property covered by the clause. SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE v. GORDHANDAS I PATEL Bom. 471

Construction—"Good work" whether vague—Held there was no permanent dedication absolutely in favour of idol.

The whole of the will must be considered together to arrive at the meaning of it.

The term "good works" is certainly exceedingly vague and is void for uncertainty. Nek kam or good works is vague and does not necessarily mean an expenditure on a charitable object.

If the real intention of the testator was to benefit the idol and there was clear dedication than the idol would become the owner of the property. If, on the other hand, the dominating intention was to benefit individuals and not a deity then the whole transaction would be a mere colourable imitation of a dedication or at most there might be a charge in favour of the particular idol.

Held, after construing the terms of the will that the will was altogether so vague that it was not possible to say for certain that the testator intended a permanent dedication to the idol absolutely. No valid trust was created by the will and that at most there was a charge or trust in favour of the idol for bhag which need be no more than the ordinary daily food of the family. GAURI SHANKAR v. MOHAN LAL Oudh 597

Construction—Principles—English precedents.

To construe one will by reference to expressions of more or less doubtful import to be found in other wills is for the most part an unprofitable exercise. To search and sift the heaps of cases on wills which cumber the English Law Reports, in order to understand and interpret wills of people speaking a different tongue, trained in different habits of thought and brought up under different conditions of life, seems almost absurd. SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE v. GORDHANDAS I PATEL Bom. 471

Construction—Principles—Value of decisions.

In interpreting a will the Court should place itself in the armchair of the testator and construe the will so as to give effect to the intention of the testator by suitably construing passages in the will which are not obviously plain, so as to give them the meaning which the testator would have given them. Intestacy should be avoided whenever possible. But there are cases when a Court with the best of intentions cannot understand what was the intention of the testator, and further, when the testator has used plain language, it cannot give a meaning contrary to this plain language even if to give such contrary meaning might give effect to what, from other parts of the will, might be believed to be more probably the intention of the testator.

No two wills are the same and so decisions are only a guide to the application of the principle.

GAURI SHANKAR v. MOHAN LAL Oudh 597

Construction—Sons interest held contingent and could not be attached.

A will stated "I give and devise my real and personal property ... to my beloved wife for life and after her death to vest in my sons or their heirs who may then be in existence. It is my wish that my sons hereinbefore mentioned will not be entitled to my estate during the lifetime of my said wife".

Held, that the intention of the testator was that the estate was only to vest (i. e., to vest in interest) after the death of the wife. Hence the interest of the sons was contingent and was not attachable. GANESH PRASAD AGARWALLA v. MONOHAR LAL MULLICK Cal. 801

Will traced to possession of deceased and last seen there not forthcoming after his death—Presumption arising therefrom.

If a will traced to the possession of the deceased and last seen there is not forthcoming on his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed by himself; and that presumption must have effect unless there is sufficient evidence to rebut it. The presumption will be more or less strong according to the character of the custody which the testator had over the will. SANTU v. MAIKU All. 747

Workmen's Compensation Act (III of 1923), s. 3 (1)—"Out of employment"—Onus is on applicant—Accident held did not arise out of employment and no compensation could be awarded to dependent.

In claiming compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act, the onus lies on the applicant to prove that the accident arose out of the employment, and if the evidence is not sufficient to establish this, the claim fails.

An accident arises "out of" the employment where it results from a risk incidental to the employment, as distinguished from risk common to all mankind, although the risk incidental to the employment may include a risk common to all mankind.

The deceased workman used to be employed, at various times in the work of jungle cutting and similar operations at the mine. On the day of his death, the deceased was employed in the work of clearing jungle along a boundary of the mine for the purpose of survey. While the workmen were going back to their camp in the same mining area, a dead tree on the way fell on the deceased and killed him. The tree was at some distance from the place where the deceased actually had to work. The accident was of the kind which anyone who happened to pass by the tree at the time would have met with:

Held, that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment of the workman and hence no compensation to dependent could be awarded. U YAN SHIN v. MA E SHIN Rang. 767

IMPERIAL ACTS, 1940.

ACT No. 1 of 1940

THE REGISTRATION (EMERGENCY-POWERS) ACT, 1940.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 23rd February, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 2nd March, 1940.

An Act to provide for the registration of certain European British subjects.

Whereas it is expedient to provide for the registration of certain European British subjects;

It is hereby enacted as follows :—

1. Short title, extent, commencement and duration.

(1) This Act may be called the Registration (Emergency Powers) Act, 1940.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, and applies also to European British subjects in any part of India.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint.

(4) It shall be in force during the continuance of the present war and for a period of six months thereafter.

2. Definitions.

In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "European British subject" means any subject of His Majesty of European descent in the male line, born, naturalised or domiciled in the British Islands or in any Dominion as defined in the Statute of Westminster, 1931, or in any Colony except Ceylon;

(b) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act.

187—J. 1

3. Obligation to register.

(1) Every male European British subject for the time being in India (not being—

(a) a member of his Majesty's naval, military or air forces, or

who for the time being has attained the age of sixteen years but has not attained the age of fifty years, shall, within the prescribed period, correctly fill up, or cause so to be filled up, to the best of his knowledge and belief, sign and lodge with the appropriate registration authority specified in the First Schedule, or such other registration authority as may be prescribed, the form set out in the Second Schedule, and if any such European British subject claims not to be ordinarily resident in India, he shall lodge with the said form a statement of such claim.

(2) If any registration authority has reason to believe that any person is a European British subject to whom the provisions of sub-section (1) are applicable, he may, by order in writing, require such person to furnish such particulars as may be specified in the order within such time as may be so specified, and such person, whether or not he is a European British subject to whom the provisions of the said sub-section are applicable shall within the specified time furnish correctly to the best of his knowledge and belief the said particulars to the said registration authority in such form or manner as such order may require, and shall sign the same; and if any such person claims that he is not a European British subject to whom the provisions of sub-section (1) are applicable, he shall furnish a statement of such claim with the particulars as aforesaid,

(3) If any person refuses, or, without lawful excuse (the burden of proving which shall lie upon such person), neglects fully to comply with the requirements of sub-section (1) or of any order made under sub-section (2), he shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

(4) Every registration authority under this Act shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code.

4. Determination of disputes as to applicability of this Act.

If any question arises with reference to this Act or any rule made thereunder whether a person is a European British subject to whom the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 3 are applicable, a person appointed in writing in this behalf by the prescribed authority may apply to the District Magistrate or to any officer specially empowered in this behalf by the Central Government in the area in which the person to whom the dispute relates is for the time being present, and such Magistrate or other officer, after hearing such person or giving him a reasonable opportunity for being heard, shall summarily determine the question, and the decision of such Magistrate or other officer shall be final.

5. Power of Central Government to make rules.

(1) The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

- (a) prescribe registration authorities, in addition to those specified in the First Schedule;
- (b) prescribe the time within which the form set out in the Second Schedule shall be lodged with the registration authority;
- (c) prescribe authorities who may make the appointment referred to in section 4;
- (d) provide for the issue of certificates of registration;
- (e) provide for the preparation, compilation and correction of a register, and require the attendance of persons for any of such purposes;
- (f) require the notification of changes of address of registered persons.

(3) Rules made under this section may provide that any contravention thereof or of any order or notice issued thereunder shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

6. Act not to apply to certain persons.

Nothing in this Act shall apply to any person confined for the time being in a prison or lunatic asylum.

7. Repeal of Ordinance II of 1939.

The Registration Ordinance, 1939, is hereby repealed; but any rules made, anything done and any action taken under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been made, done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Act, and any offence committed against or any proceedings commenced under the said Ordinance, may be punished, or may be continued and completed as if such offence were committed against or such proceedings were commenced under this Act.

ACT No. II of 1940.

THE FOREIGNERS ACT, 1940.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 23rd February, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 2nd March, 1940.

An Act to provide for the imposition of restrictions on foreigners.

Whereas it is expedient to provide for the imposition of restrictions on the entry of foreigners into British India, their presence therein and their departure therefrom;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. Short title, extent and duration.

(1) This Act may be called the Foreigners Act, 1940.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

(3) It shall be in force during the continuance of the present war and for a period of six months thereafter.

2. Definitions.

In this Act,—

(a) "foreigner" has the meaning assigned to it in the Foreigners Act, 1864, except that it does not include—

(i) any ruler or subject of any Indian State; or

(ii) any native of the tribal areas;

(b) "prescribed" means prescribed by orders made under this Act;

(c) "specified" means specified by direction of a prescribed authority.

3. Power to make orders

(1) The Central Government may, by order make provision, either generally with respect to all foreigners or with respect to any particular foreigner or any prescribed class or description of foreigner, for prohibiting, regulating or restricting the entry of foreigners into British India or their departure therefrom or their presence or continued presence therein.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, orders made under this section may provide that the foreigner—

(a) shall not enter British India, or shall enter British India only at such times and by such route and at such port or place and subject to the observance of such conditions on arrival as may be prescribed;

(b) shall not depart from British India, or shall depart only at such times and by such route and from such port or place and subject to the observance of such conditions on departure as may be prescribed;

(c) shall not remain in British India, or in any prescribed area therein;

(d) shall remove himself to, and remain in, such area in British India as may be prescribed;

(e) shall comply with such conditions as may be prescribed or specified—

(i) requiring him to reside in a particular place;

(ii) imposing any restrictions on his movements;

(iii) requiring him to furnish such proof of his identity and to report such particulars to such authority in such manner and at such time and place as may be prescribed or specified;

(iv) requiring him to allow his photograph and finger impressions to be taken and to furnish specimens of his handwriting and signature to such authority and at such time and place as may be prescribed or specified;

(v) prohibiting him from association with persons of a prescribed or specified description;

(vi) prohibiting him from engaging in activities of a prescribed or specified description;

(vii) prohibiting him from using or possessing prescribed or specified articles; or

(viii) otherwise regulating his conduct in any such particular as may be prescribed or specified;

(f) shall enter into a bond with or without sureties for the due observance of, or as an alternative to the enforcement of, any or all prescribed or specified restrictions or conditions; or

- (g) shall be arrested and detained or confined;

and may make provision for such incidental and supplementary matters as may, in the opinion of the Central Government, be expedient or necessary for giving effect to this Act.

4. Internees.

(1) Any foreigner (hereinafter referred to as an internee) in respect of whom there is in force any order made under clause (g) of sub-section (2) of section 3, directing that he be detained or confined, shall be detained or confined in such place and manner and subject to such conditions as to maintenance, discipline and the punishment of offences and breaches of discipline as the Central Government may from time to time determine.

(2) No person shall—

- (a) knowingly assist an internee to escape from custody or knowingly harbour an escaped internee; or
- (b) give an escaped internee any assistance with intent thereby to prevent, hinder or interfere with the apprehension of the internee.

(3) The Central Government may, by order, provide for regulating access to, and the conduct of persons in, places in British India where internees are detained and for prohibiting or regulating the despatch or conveyance from outside such places to or for internees therein of such articles as may be prescribed.

(4) No proceedings shall be taken by virtue of sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) against any person in respect of any act done by him when he is himself an internee.

5. Change of name.

(1) No foreigner who was in British India on the date on which this Act came into force shall, while in British India after that date, assume or use or purport to assume or use for any purpose any name other than that by which he was ordinarily known immediately before the said date.

(2) Where, after the date on which this Act came into force, any foreigner carries on or purports to carry on (whether alone or in association with any other person) any trade or business under any name or style other than that under which that trade or business was being carried on immediately before the said date, he shall, for the purposes of sub-section (1), be deemed to be using a name other than that by which he was ordinarily known immediately before the said date.

(3) In relation to any foreigner who, not having been in British India on the date on which this Act came into force, thereafter enters British India, sub-sections (1) and (2) shall have effect as if for any reference in those sub-sections to the date on which this Act came into force there were substituted a reference to the date on which he first enters British India thereafter.

(4) For the purposes of this section—

- (a) the expression "name" includes a surname, and
- (b) a name shall be deemed to be changed if the spelling thereof is altered.

(5) Nothing in this section shall apply to the assumption or use—

- (a) of any name in pursuance of a Royal licence; or
- (b) by any married woman, of her husband's name.

6. Obligations of masters of vessels etc

Any District Magistrate and any Commissioner of Police or, where there is no Commissioner of Police, any Superintendent of Police, may, for any purpose connected with the enforcement of this Act or any order made thereunder, enter, with such assistance as he may think fit, any vessel or aircraft at any port or place in British India and may—

- (a) direct the master of the vessel or the pilot of the aircraft, as the case may be,—
 - (i) before any passenger disembarks, or before the vessel or aircraft leaves such port or place, as the case may be, to furnish a list in writing of the passengers who are on board or who have been carried on board at any time since the vessel or aircraft commenced its journey, or who have signified their intention of departing from British India on board such vessel or aircraft, setting out the ports or places at which they embarked, the ports or places of their disembarkation or intended disembarkation, and such other particulars as may be prescribed, and

- (ii) to answer to the best of his ability any question relating to the passengers who are on board or who have disembarked in any part of British India; and

- (b) if any foreigner seeking to enter British India on board such vessel or aircraft does not give satisfactory reasons for entering British India, either—

- (i) refuse to allow such foreigner to disembark from such vessel or aircraft, or
- (ii) place him under such restraint as may be prescribed or specified.

7. Burden of proof.

If any question arises with reference to this Act or any order made or direction given thereunder, whether any person is or is not a foreigner or is or is not a foreigner of a particular class or description, the onus of proving that such person is not a foreigner or is not a foreigner of such particular class or description, as the case may be, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, lie upon such person.

8. Power to exempt from application of Act.

The Central Government may, by order, declare that any or all of the provisions of this Act or the orders made thereunder shall not apply, or shall apply only with such modifications or subject to such conditions as may be specified, to or in relation to any individual foreigner or any class or description of foreigner.

9. Power to give effect to orders, directions, etc.

(1) Any authority empowered by or under or in pursuance of the provisions of this Act to give any direction or to exercise any other power, may, in addition to any other action expressly provided for in this Act, take, or cause to be taken, such steps and use, or cause to be used, such force as may, in its opinion, be reasonably necessary for securing compliance with such direction or for preventing or rectifying any breach thereof, or for the effective exercise of such power, as the case may be.

(2) Any police officer may take such steps and use such force as may, in his opinion, be reasonably necessary for securing compliance with any order made or direction given under or in pursuance of the provisions of this Act or for preventing or rectifying any breach of such order or direction.

(3) The power conferred by this section shall be deemed to confer upon any person acting in exercise thereof a right of access to any land or other property whatsoever.

10. Power to delegate authority.

Any authority upon which any power to make or give any direction, consent or permission or to do any other act is conferred by this Act or by any order made thereunder may, unless express provision is made to the contrary, in writing authorise, conditionally or otherwise, any authority subordinate to it to exercise such power on its behalf, and thereupon the said subordinate authority shall, subject to such conditions as may be contained in the authorisation, be deemed to be the authority upon which such power is conferred by or under this Act.

11. Attempts, etc., to contravene the provisions of this Act, etc.

(1) Any person who attempts to contravene, or abets, or attempts to abet, or does any act preparatory to, a contravention of, the provisions of this Act or of any order made or direction given thereunder, or fails to comply with any direction given in pursuance of any such order, shall be deemed to have contravened the provisions of this Act.

(2) Any person who, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that any other person has contravened the provisions of this Act or of any order made or direction given thereunder, gives that other person any assistance with intent thereby to prevent, hinder or otherwise interfere with his arrest, trial or punishment for the said contravention, shall be deemed to have abetted that contravention.

(3) The master of any vessel or the pilot of any aircraft, as the case may be, by means of which any foreigner enters or leaves British India in contravention of any order made under, or direction given in pursuance of, section 3 shall, unless he proves that he exercised all due diligence to prevent the said contravention, be deemed to have contravened this Act.

12. Penalties.

If any person contravenes the provisions of this Act or of any order made thereunder or any direction given in pursuance of this Act or such order, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years and shall also be liable to fine; and if such person has entered into a bond in pursuance of clause (f) of sub-section (2) of section 3, his bond shall be forfeited, and any person bound thereby shall pay the penalty thereof, or show cause to the satisfaction of the convicting Court why such penalty should not be paid.

13. Protection to persons acting under this Act.

No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

14. Application of other laws not barred.

The provisions of this Act shall be in addition to, and not in derogation of, the provisions of the Foreigners Act, 1864, the Registration of Foreigners Act, 1939, and of any other enactment for the time being in force.

15. Repeal and saving.

(1) The Foreigners Ordinance, 1939, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, all orders made, directions given, things done and action taken under the said Ordinance, shall be deemed to have been made, given, done or taken under the provisions of this Act as if this Act had come into force on the 26th day of August, 1939, references to the said Ordinance in any rule made under any enactment shall be construed as reference to this Act, and offences committed against or proceedings commenced under the said Ordinance may be punished or may be continued and completed as if such offences were committed against or such proceedings were commenced under this Act.

ACT No. III of 1940.

THE ROYAL INDIAN NAVY (EXTENSION OF SERVICE) ACT, 1940.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 23rd February, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 2nd March, 1940.

An Act to provide for the retention in service of certain person enrolled for service in the Royal Indian Navy.

Whereas it is expedient to provide for the retention in service of certain persons enrolled for service in the Royal Indian Navy;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. Short title.

This Act may be called the Royal Indian Navy (Extension of Service) Act, 1940.

2. Extension of service where term of service has expired.

(1) Until such date as may be notified by the Central Government as the date of termination of the present hostilities any person enrolled for service in the Royal Indian Navy who, by reason of the expiry of the term for which he engaged to serve when so enrolled, is no longer liable for service shall, notwithstanding such expiry, continue to be enrolled for service and to be liable for service in the Royal Indian Navy until he is discharged by order of the Officer Commanding the Royal Indian Navy:

Provided that the period for which the service of any such person is extended under this section shall not exceed five years from the day on which his service would otherwise have terminated.

(2) The provisions of this section shall apply also to any person enrolled for service in the Royal Indian Navy if the expiry of the term for which he engaged to serve occurred between the 2nd day of September, 1939, and the commencement of this Act.

ACT No. IV of 1940.

THE OFFENCES ON SHIPS AND AIRCRAFT ACT, 1940

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 23rd February, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 2nd March, 1940.

An Act to extend the operation of the criminal law to offences committed on ship or aircraft registered in British India wherever they may be.

Whereas it is expedient to extend the operation of the criminal law to offences committed on ships or aircraft registered in British India wherever they may be, and for that purpose further to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. Short title.

This Act may be called the Offences on Ships and Aircraft Act, 1940.

2. Amendment of section 4 of Act XLV of 1860.

In section 4 of the Indian Penal Code, after clause (3) the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

"(4) any person on any ship or aircraft registered in British India wherever it may be."

3. Amendment of section 188 of Act V of 1898.

In section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, after the words "Prince or Chief in India", where they occur for the second time, the following words shall be inserted, namely:—

"or when any person commits an offence on any ship or aircraft registered in British India wherever it may be."

Extracts from Contemporaries.

Section 27, Evidence Act whether repealed by s. 162, Criminal P. C. ?

Some time back their Lordships of the Privy Council in 180 Ind. Cas. 1 held that the words "by any person" in s. 162 Criminal P. C. included an accused person, thereby overruling the view held by the majority of Indian High Courts. Their Lordships further observed that the words of s. 162 are plainly wide enough to exclude any confession made to a Police Officer in course of investigation whether a discovery is made or not. "They may therefore," observed their Lordships, "pro tanto repeal the provisions of the section which would otherwise apply. If they do not presumably it would be on the ground that s. 27 of the Evi. Act is a "Special Law" within the meaning of s. 1 (2) of the Criminal P. C. and that s. 162, Criminal P. C. is not a specific provision to the contrary." The question, whether the provisions of s. 27, Evi. Act have been pro tanto repealed by s. 162, Criminal P. C. came up before a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court, consisting of seven Judges. The majority (five Judges including the learned Chief Justice) held that s. 162 does repeal pro tanto s. 27 of the Evi. Act. Dalip Singh and Bhide, JJ. wrote dissenting judgments. The other Judges concurred with the learned Chief Justice. After quoting the provisions of s. 162 and s. 1 (2), Criminal P. C. and s. 27 of the Evi. Act, the learned Chief Justice traced the history of the sections. His Lordship was of the opinion that it was not necessary to consider whether s. 27, Evi. Act is "a special law" within the meaning of s. 1 (2), Criminal P. C. though he admitted that the point was not free from difficulty. In this respect, Tek Chand, J., who concurred in the answer with the learned Chief Justice held that though the whole of the Evi. Act is not "a special law", s. 27 contains the "law on a particular subject" and is therefore a special law. The learned Chief Justice, however, held that s. 162 is a specific provision to the contrary" within the meaning of s. 1 (2) of the Criminal P. C. "There could hardly be anything more definite or explicit than the terms of s. 162..... In addition" observed his Lordship, "when there are two exceptions included in the section affecting the Evi. Act and no mention of s. 27 is made, the matter is put beyond doubt." Thus in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice (and the majority) s. 27 is pro tanto repealed by s. 162, Criminal P. C. the latter being "a specific provision to the contrary," within the meaning of s. 1 (2), Criminal P. C. and therefore affecting s. 27, Evi. Act whether, it be special law or not. Evidence of information, whether it amounts to confession or not which relates to the fact discovered in consequence of such information must not now be considered admissible in evidence. It is for the legislature to consider the effect of this decision of the Full Bench and to amend s. 162, if that is thought to be advisable. But we venture to suggest that it would not take any hasty step in the matter.

Penal Reform League.

Sir Maurice Gwyer, the Chief Justice of the Federal Court of India, who inaugurated the Penal Reform Conference recently held in Bombay gave a very lucid discourse on modern conception of crime and the criminal. A proposal to start a Penal Reform League was stressed during the conference. The proposal has come none too soon. In this matter India lags far behind the advanced countries, where penology has advanced considerably. It is a matter of regret that the public in our country, had not taken any keen interest in the field. The proposed League could not have had a more enthusiastic and competent sponsor than Mr. K. M. Munshi the Home Minister in the late Congress cabinet of the Bombay Govt. Mr. Munshi has with him the practical knowledge of the prison life and also the practical experience of tackling the problem from the administrative side.

While emphasising the need for an increase in the general standard of education to eradicate the criminal from the society, Sir Maurice said that the criminal was no longer to be looked down without pity or remorse, that we have come to recognize that the criminal is a man like any one of us and that "we may have to bear part of the responsibility for having made him what he is". The real problem which the conference had to consider, he opined, was how to reconcile the state claims with those of the individual.

In his presidential address, while speaking on the various aspects of Criminal Law Reform, Mr. Munshi said that "justice in criminal cases must move in the direction of individualisation". To effect the suitable reforms, he proposed an expert body like the Penal Law Reform League. We whole-heartedly welcome the proposal but at the same time we wish to emphasise as was done by Sir Maurice in his address, the need to carry public opinion in any penal reform.

Leave to Appeal From F. C. of India.

On refusal of the Federal Court to grant leave to the petitioner to appeal against the decision of the Court, (1st Ind. Cas. 317) to the Privy Council, under s. 208-B, Govt. of India Act, the petitioner applied to His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal in forma pauperis. This has the distinction of being the first application for such leave from the Federal Court of India. The question for consideration was the true construction of s. 270, sub-s. (1) of the Govt. of India Act, 1935. This section, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed is in the nature of an exceptional section, which was intended to afford some measure of protection to certain public servants in relation to acts done or purported to be done in execution of their duty being acts done before the date in question which is April 14, 1937. In this matter, their Lordships thought that once a matter was before the Federal Court an appeal from that Court should not be highly admitted unless it arises in a really substantial case. In this case since the matter concerned was purely technical and one with regard to the construction of a very exceptional section, which would have no application in the future, their Lordships refused to grant leave to appeal. The principle inunited by their Lordships in this case, if we may respectfully say so, is wholesome and put a check on frivolous applications of the sort.

IMPERIAL ACTS.

THE TRADE MARKS ACT, 1940.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 11th March, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 16th March, 1940.

An Act to provide for the registration and more effective protection of Trade Marks.

Whereas it is expedient to provide for the registration and more effective protection of trade marks :

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

1. Short title, extent and commencement.

(1) This Act may be called the Trade Marks Act, 1940.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

(3) This section and section 85, shall come into force at once ; the remaining provisions of the Act shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint in this behalf.

2. Definitions.

(1) In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context —

(a) "associated trade marks" means trade marks deemed to be, or required to be registered as, associated trade marks under this Act ;

(b) "certification trade mark" means a mark adapted in relation to any goods to distinguish in the course of trade goods certified by any person in respect of origin, material mode of manufacture, quality, accuracy or other characteristic, from goods not so certified and registrable as such under the provisions of Chapter VIII in respect of those goods in the name, as proprietor of the certification trade mark, of that person ;

(c) "District Court" has the meaning assigned to it in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 ;

(d) "High Court" means a High Court as defined in sub-section (1) of section 219 of the Government of India Act, 1935 ;

(e) "limitations" (with its grammatical variations) means any limitations of the exclusive right to the use of a trade mark given by the registration of a person as proprietor thereof, including limitations of that right as to mode of use, as to use in relation to goods to be sold or otherwise traded in within British India, or as to use in relation to goods to be exported to any market outside British India ;

(f) "mark" includes a device, brand, heading, label, ticket, name, signature, word, letter or numeral or any combination thereof ;

(g) "permitted use" means the use of a trade mark by a registered user thereof in relation to goods with which he is connected in the course of trade and in respect of which for the time being the trade mark remains registered and he is registered as a registered user, being use such as to comply with any conditions or restrictions to which his registration is subject ;

(h) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made, in relation to proceedings before a High Court, by such High Court and in other cases, by the Central Government ;

(i) "registered" (with its grammatical variations) means registered under this Act ;

(j) "registered trade mark" means a trade mark which is actually on the register ;

- (k) "registered user" means a person who is for the time being registered as such under section 41 ;
- (l) "trade mark" means a mark used or proposed to be used in relation to goods for the purpose of indicating or so as to indicate a connection in the course of trade between the goods and some person having the right, either as proprietor or as registered user, to use the mark whether with or without any indication of the identity of that person ;
- (m) "transmission" means transmission by operation of law, devolution on the personal representative of a deceased person and any other mode of transfers, not being assignment ;
- (n) "tribunal" means the Registrar or, as the case may be, the Court before which the proceeding concerned is pending.

(2) References in this Act to the use of a mark shall be construed as references to the use of a printed or other visual representation of the mark, and references herein to the use of a mark in relation to goods shall be construed as references to the use thereof upon, or in any other relation whatsoever to, such goods.

3. Application of other laws not barred.
The provisions of this Act shall be in addition to, and not in derogation of, the provisions of any other law for the time being in force.

CHAPTER II.

THE REGISTER AND CONDITIONS FOR REGISTRATION.

4. The register of trade marks.

(1) For the purposes of this Act there shall be established at the Patent Office a Trade Mark Registry, and a record called the Register of Trade Marks (in this Act referred to as the register) shall be kept thereat wherein shall be entered all registered trade marks with the names, addresses and descriptions of their proprietors, notifications of assignments and transmissions, the names, addresses and description of registered users, disclaimers, conditions, limitations ; and such other matters relating to registered trade marks as may be prescribed, but there shall not be entered in the register any notice of any trust express, implied or constructive, nor shall any such notice be receivable by the Registrar.

(2) Subject to the superintendence and direction of the Central Government, the register shall be kept under the control and management of the Controller of Patents and Designs, who shall for the purposes of this Act be called the Registrar of Trade Marks and is in this Act referred to as the Registrar.

(3) The register shall at all convenient times be open to the inspection of the public, subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be prescribed.

5. Registration to be in respect of particular goods.

(1) A trade mark may be registered only in respect of particular goods or classes of goods.

(2) Any question arising as to the class within which any goods fall shall be determined by the Registrar whose decision in the matter shall be final.

6. Distinctiveness requisite for registration.

(1) A trade mark shall not be registered unless it contains or consists of at least one of the following essential particulars, namely :—

- (a) the name of a company, individual or firm, represented in a special or particular manner ;
- (b) the signature of the applicant for registration or some predecessor in his business ;
- (c) one or more invented words ;
- (d) one or more words having no direct reference to the character or quality of the goods, and not being, according to its ordinary signification, a geographical name or surname or the name of a sect, caste or tribe in India ;
- (e) any other distinctive mark, provided that a name, signature, or any word, other than such as fall within the descriptions in the above clauses, shall not be registrable except upon evidence of its distinctiveness.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the expression "distinctive," means adapted in relation to the goods in respect of which a trade mark is proposed to be registered, to distinguish goods with which the proprietor of the trade mark is or may be connected in the course of trade from goods in the case of which no such connection subsists either generally or, where the trade mark is proposed to be registered subject to limitations, in relation to use within the extent of the registration.

(3) In determining whether a trade mark is adapted to distinguish as aforesaid, the tribunal may have regard to the extent to which—

- (a) the trade mark is inherently so adapted to distinguish, and
- (b) by reason of the use of the trade mark or of any other circumstances, the trade mark is in fact so adapted to distinguish:

Provided that in the case of a trade mark which has been continuously used (either by the applicant for registration or by some predecessor in his business, and either in its original form or with additions or alterations not substantially affecting its identity) in relation to the same goods as those in relation to which registration is applied for, during a period from a date prior to the 25th day of February, 1937, to the date of application for registration, the Registrar shall not refuse registration by reason only of the fact that the trade mark is not adapted to distinguish as aforesaid, and may accept evidence of acquired distinctiveness as entitling the trade mark to registration.

7. Limitation as to colour.

(1) A trade mark may be limited wholly or in part to one or more specified colours, and any such limitation shall be taken into consideration by any tribunal having to decide on the distinctive character of the trade mark.

(2) So far as a trade mark is registered without limitation of colour it shall be deemed to be registered for all colours.

8. Prohibition of registration of certain matter.

No trade mark nor part of a trade mark shall be registered which consists of, or contains, any scandalous design, or any matter the use of which would—

- (a) by reason of its being likely to deceive or to cause confusion or otherwise, be disentitled to protection in a Court of justice; or
- (b) be likely to hurt the religious susceptibilities of any class of His Majesty's subjects; or
- (c) be contrary to any law for the time being in force or to morality.

9. Use of names of chemical elements barred.

No word which is the commonly used and accepted name of any single chemical element or single chemical compound (as distinguished from a mixture) shall be registered as a trade mark in respect of a chemical substance or preparation, and any such registration shall, notwithstanding anything in section 24, be deemed for the purposes of section 46 to be an entry made in the register without sufficient cause or an entry wrongly remaining on the register, as the circumstances may require:

Provided that this section shall not apply to a word which is used to denote only a brand or make of the element or compound as made by the proprietor or a registered user of the trade mark, as distinguished from the element or compound as made by others, and in association with a suitable name or description open to the public use.

10. Prohibition of registration of identical or similar trade mark.

(1) Save as provided in sub-section (2), no trade mark shall be registered in respect of any goods or description of goods which is identical with a trade mark belonging to a different proprietor and already on the register in respect of the same goods or description of goods, or which so nearly resembles such trade mark as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion.

(2) In case of honest concurrent use or of other special circumstances which, in the opinion of the Registrar, make it proper so to do he may permit the registration by more than one proprietor of trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other in respect of the same goods or description of goods, subject to such conditions and limitations, if any, as the Registrar may think fit to impose.

(3) Where separate applications are made by different persons to be registered as proprietors respectively of trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other, in respect of the same goods or description of goods, the Registrar may refuse to register any of them until their rights have been determined by a competent Court.

11. Registration of parts of trade marks and of trade marks as a series.

(1) Where the proprietor of a trade mark claims to be entitled to the exclusive use of any part thereof separately, he may apply to register the whole and the part as separate trade marks.

(2) Each such separate trade mark shall satisfy all the conditions applying to, and have all the incidents of, an independent trade mark.

(3) Where a person claiming to be the proprietor of several trade marks in respect of the same goods or description of goods which, while resembling each other in the material particulars thereof, yet differ in respect of—

- (a) statements of the goods in relation to which they are respectively used or proposed to be used; or
- (b) statements of number, price, quality, or names of places; or
- (c) other matter of a non-distinctive character which does not substantially affect the identity of the trade mark; or
- (d) colour;

seeks to register those trade marks, they may be registered as a series in one registration.

12. Associated trade marks.

(1) Where a trade mark which is registered, or is the subject of an application for registration, in respect of any goods is identical with another trade mark which is registered, or is the subject of an application for registration, in the name of the same proprietor in respect of the same goods or description of goods, or so nearly resembles it as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion if used by a person other than the proprietor, the Registrar may at any time require that the trade marks shall be entered on the register as associated trade marks.

(2) Where a trade mark and any part thereof are, in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 11, registered as separate trade marks in the name of the same proprietor, they shall be deemed to be, and shall be registered as, associated trade marks.

(3) All trade marks registered in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 11 as a series in one registration shall be deemed to be, and shall be registered as, associated trade marks.

(4) On application made in the prescribed manner by the registered proprietor of two or more trade marks registered as associated trade marks, the Registrar may dissolve the association as respects any of them if he is satisfied that there would be no likelihood of deception or confusion being caused if that trade mark were used by any other person in relation to any of the goods in respect of which it is registered, and may amend the register accordingly.

13. Registration subject to disclaimer.

If a trade mark contains—

- (a) any part not separately registered as a trade mark in the name of the proprietor, or for the separate registration of which no application has been made, or

- (b) any matter common to the trade, or otherwise of a non-distinctive character, the tribunal, in deciding whether the trade mark shall be entered or shall remain on the register, may require, as a condition of its being on the register, that the proprietor shall either disclaim any right to the exclusive use of such part or of all or any portion of such matter, as the case may be, to the exclusive use of which the tribunal holds him not to be entitled, or make such other disclaimer as the tribunal may consider necessary for the purpose of defining the rights of the proprietor under the registration:

Provided that no disclaimer shall affect any rights of the proprietor of a trade mark except such as arise out of the registration of the trade mark in respect of which the disclaimer is made.

CHAPTER III.

PROCEDURE FOR, AND DURATION OF, REGISTRATION.

14. Application for registration.

(1) Any person claiming to be the proprietor of a trade mark used or proposed to be used by him who is desirous of registering it shall apply in writing to the Registrar in the prescribed manner, and subject to the provisions of this Act, the Registrar may refuse the application or may accept it absolutely or subject to such amendments, modifications, conditions or limitations, if any, as he may think fit.

(2) In the case of a refusal or conditional acceptance the Registrar shall, if required by the applicant, state in writing the grounds of his decision and the materials used by him in arriving thereat.

(3) The tribunal may at any time, whether before or after acceptance, correct any error in or in connection with the application, or may permit the applicant to amend his application upon such terms as it may think fit.

15. Opposition to registration.

(1) When an application for registration of a trade mark has been accepted, whether absolutely or subject to conditions or limitations, the Registrar shall, as soon as may be after acceptance, cause the application as accepted, together with the conditions and limitations, if any, subject to which it has been accepted, to be advertised in the prescribed manner:

Provided that the Registrar may cause an application to be advertised before acceptance if it relates to a trade mark to which clause (e) of sub-section (1) of section 6 applies, or in any other case where it appears to him that it is expedient by reason of any exceptional circumstances so to do, and where an application has been so advertised the Registrar may, if he thinks fit, advertise it again when it has been accepted, but shall not be bound so to do.

(2) Any person may, within the prescribed time from the date of the advertisement of an application, give notice in writing in the prescribed manner to the Registrar of opposition to the registration.

(3) The Registrar shall serve in the prescribed manner a copy of the notice on the applicant, and within the prescribed time the applicant shall send to the Registrar, in the prescribed manner, a counter-statement of the grounds on which he relies for his application, and, if he does not do so, he shall be deemed to have abandoned his application.

(4) If the applicant sends such counter-statement, the Registrar shall serve in the prescribed manner a copy thereof on the persons giving notice of opposition, and shall, after hearing the parties, if so required, and considering the evidence, decide whether, and subject to what conditions or limitations, if any, registration is to be permitted.

(5) If a person giving notice of opposition or an applicant sending a counter-statement after receipt of a copy of such notice, or an appellant against any order of the Registrar under section 14 or this section, neither resides nor carries on business in British India, the tribunal may require him to give security for costs of the proceedings before it, and in default of such security being duly given may treat the opposition or application or appeal, as the case may be, as abandoned.

16. Registration.

(1) When an application for registration of a trade mark has been accepted and either has not been opposed and the time for notice of opposition has expired, or having been opposed, has been decided in favour of the applicant, the Registrar shall, unless the application has been accepted in error, or unless the Central Government otherwise directs, register the said trade mark, and the trade mark, when registered, shall be registered as of the date of the making of the said application, and that date shall, subject to any directions made under section 83 applicable to such trade mark, be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be the date of registration.

(2) On the registration of a trade mark the Registrar shall issue to the applicant a certificate in the prescribed form of the registration thereof sealed with the seal of the Patent Office.

(3) Where registration of a trade mark is not completed within twelve months from the date of the application by reason of default on the part of the applicant, the Registrar may, after giving notice to the applicant in the prescribed manner, treat the application as abandoned unless it is completed within the time specified in that behalf in the notice.

17. Jointly owned trade marks.

(1) Save as provided in sub-section (2), nothing in this Act shall authorise the registration of two or more persons who use a trade mark independently, or propose so to use it, as joint proprietors thereof.

(2) Where the relations between two or more persons interested in a trade mark are such that no one of them is entitled as between himself and the other or others of them to use it except—

(a) on behalf of both or all of them, or

(b) in relation to an article with which both or all of them are connected in the course of trade, those persons may be registered as joint proprietors of the trade mark, and this Act shall have effect in relation to any rights to the use of the trade mark vested in those persons as if those rights had been vested in a single person.

18. Duration and renewal of registration.

(1) The registration of a trade mark shall be for a period of seven years, but may be renewed from time to time in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(2) The Registrar shall, on application made by the registered proprietor of a trade mark in the prescribed manner and within the prescribed period, renew the registration of the trade mark for a period of fifteen years from the date of expiration of the original registration or of the last renewal of registration, as the case may be (which date is in this section referred to as "the expiration of the last registration").

(3) At the prescribed time before the expiration of the last registration of a trade mark, the Registrar shall send notice in the prescribed manner to the registered proprietor of the date of expiration and the conditions as to payment of fees and otherwise upon which a renewal of registration may be obtained, and if at the expiration of the time prescribed in that behalf those conditions have not been duly complied with the Registrar may remove the trade mark from the register, subject to such conditions (if any) as to its restoration to the register as may be prescribed.

19. Effect of removal from register for failure to pay fee for renewal.

Where a trade mark has been removed from the register for failure to pay the fee for renewal, it shall nevertheless, for the purpose of any application for the registration of another trade mark during one year next after the date of the removal, be deemed to be a trade mark already on the register, unless the tribunal is satisfied either—

- (a) that there has been no bona fide trade use of the trade mark which has been removed during the two years immediately preceding its removal; or
- (b) that no deception or confusion would be likely to arise from the use of the trade mark which is the subject of the application for registration by reason of any previous use of the trade mark which has been removed.

CHAPTER IV.

EFFECT OF REGISTRATION.

20. No action for infringement of unregistered trade mark.

(1) No person shall be entitled to institute any proceeding to prevent, or to recover damages for, the infringement of an unregistered trade mark unless such trade mark has been continuously in use since before the 25th day of February, 1937, by such person or by a predecessor in title of his and unless an application for its registration, made within five years from the commencement of this Act, has been refused; and the Registrar shall, on application in the prescribed manner, grant a certificate that such application has been refused.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect rights of action against any person for passing off goods as the goods of another person or the remedies in respect thereof.

21. Right conferred by registration.

Subject to the provisions of sections 22, 25 and 26, the registration of a person in the register as proprietor of a trade mark in respect of any goods shall, if valid, give to that person the exclusive right to the use of the trade mark in relation to those goods and, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, that right shall be deemed to be infringed by any person who, not being the proprietor of the trade mark or a registered user thereof using by way of the permitted use, uses a mark identical with it or so nearly resembling it as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion, in the course of trade, in relation to any goods in respect of which it is registered, and in such manner as to render the use of the mark likely to be taken either—

- (a) as being use as a trade mark; or
- (b) to import a reference to some person having the right either as a proprietor or as registered user to use the trade mark or to goods with which such a person as aforesaid is connected in the course of trade.

22. No infringement in certain circumstances.

(1) The right to the use of a trade mark given under section 21 by registration shall be subject to any conditions or limitations entered on the register, and shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid in any mode, in relation to goods to be sold or otherwise traded in, in any place, or in relation to goods to be exported to any market, or in any other circumstances, to which, having regard to any such limitations, the registration does not extend.

(2) The said right to the use of a trade mark shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid by any person—

- (a) in relation to goods connected in the course of trade with the proprietor or a registered user of the trade mark if, as to those goods or a bulk of which they form part, the proprietor or the registered user conforming to the permitted use has applied the trade mark and has not subsequently removed or obliterated it, or has at any time expressly or impliedly consented to the use of the trade mark; or
- (b) in relation to goods adapted to form part of, or to be accessory to, other goods in relation to which the trade mark has been used without infringement of the right given as aforesaid or might for the time being be so used, if the use of the mark is reasonably necessary in order to indicate that the goods are so adapted and neither the purpose nor the effect of the use of the mark is to indicate otherwise than in accordance with the fact a connection in the course of trade between any person and the goods.

(3) The use of a registered trade mark, being one of two or more registered trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other, in exercise of the right to the use of that trade mark given by registration as aforesaid, shall not be deemed to be an infringement of the right so given to the use of any other of those trade marks.

23. Registration to be prima facie evidence of validity.

In all legal proceedings relating to a registered trade mark, the fact that a person is registered as proprietor thereof shall be prima facie evidence of the validity of the original registration of the trade mark and of all subsequent assignments and transmissions thereof.

24. Registration to be conclusive as to validity after seven years.

In all legal proceedings relating to a registered trade mark, the original registration of the trade mark shall after the expiration of seven years from the date of such original registration be taken to be valid in all respects unless such registration was obtained by fraud, or unless the trade mark offends against the provisions of s. 8.

25. Saving for vested rights.

Nothing in this Act shall entitle the proprietor or a registered user of a registered trade mark to interfere with or restrain the use by any person of a trade mark identical with or nearly resembling it in relation to goods in relation to which that person or a predecessor in title of his has continuously used that trade mark from a date prior—

(a) to the use of the first-mentioned trade mark in relation to those goods by the proprietor or a predecessor in title of his, or

(b) to the registration of the first-mentioned trade mark in respect of those goods in the name of the proprietor or a predecessor in title of his, whichever is the earlier, or to object (on such use being proved) to registration of that identical or nearly resembling trade mark in respect of those goods under sub-section (2) of section 10.

26. Saving for use of name, address, or description of goods.

No registration of a trade mark shall interfere with any bona fide use by a person of his own name or that of his place of business, or of the name, or of the name of the place of business, of any of his predecessors in business, or the use by any person of any bona fide description of the character or quality of his goods, not being a description that would be likely to be taken as importing any such reference as is mentioned in clause (b) of section 21 or in clause (b) of section 57.

27. Words used as name or description of an article or substance.

(1) The registration of a trade mark shall not be deemed to have become invalid by reason only of any use after the date of the registration of any words which the trade mark contains or of which it consists as the name or description of an article or substance:

Provided that, if it is proved either—

(a) that there is a well-known and established use of the said words as the name or description of the article or substance by a person or persons carrying on a trade therein, not being use in relation to goods connected in the course of trade with the proprietor or a registered user of the trade mark or (in the case of a certification trade mark) goods certified by the proprietor; or

(b) that the article or substance has been manufactured under a patent in force at or granted after the commencement of this section, that a period of two years or more after the cesser of the patent has elapsed, and that the said words are the only practicable name or description of the article or substance,— the provisions of sub-section (2) shall apply.

(2) Where the facts mentioned in clause (a) or clause (b) of the proviso to sub-section (1) are proved with respect to any words then—

(a) for the purposes of any proceedings under section 46—

(i) if the trade mark consists solely of such words, the registration of the trade mark, so far as regards registration in respect of the article or substance in question or of any goods of the same description, shall be deemed to be an entry wrongly remaining on the register;

- (ii) if the trade mark contains such words and other matter, the tribunal, in deciding whether the trade mark shall remain on the register, so far as regards registration in respect of the article or substance in question and of any goods of the same description, may, in case of a decision in favour of its remaining on the register, require as a condition thereof that the proprietor shall disclaim any right to the exclusive use in relation to that article or substance and any goods of the same description, of such words, provided that no disclaimer shall affect any rights of the proprietor of a trade mark except such as arise out of the registration of the trade mark in respect of which the disclaimer is made;

(b) for the purposes of any other legal proceedings relating to the trade mark,—

- (i) if the trade mark consists solely of such words, all rights of the proprietor under this Act or any other law to the exclusive use of the trade mark in relation to the article or substance in question or to any goods of the same description, or

- (ii) if the trade mark contains such words and other matter, all such rights of the proprietor to the exclusive use of such words, in such relation as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have ceased on the date at which the use mentioned in clause (a) of the proviso to sub-section (1) first became well-known and established, or at the expiration of the period of two years mentioned in clause (b) of the said proviso.

CHAPTER V.

ASSIGNMENT AND TRANSMISSION.

28. Power of registered proprietor to assign and give receipts.

The person for the time being entered in the register as proprietor of a trade mark shall, subject to the provisions of this Act and to any rights appearing from the register to be vested in any other person, have power to assign the trade mark, and to give effectual receipts for any consideration for such assignment.

29. Assignability of registered trade marks.

Notwithstanding anything in any other law to the contrary, a registered trade mark shall, subject to the provisions of this Chapter, be assignable and transmissible whether in connection with the goodwill of a business or not, and in respect either of all of the goods in respect of which it is registered or of some only of those goods.

30. Assignability of unregistered trade marks.

An unregistered trade mark shall be assignable and transmissible, whether in connection with the goodwill of a business or not:

Provided that except in connection with the goodwill of a business, assignment or transmission shall be permissible only if—

- (a) at the time of assignment or transmission of the unregistered trade mark it is used in the same business as a registered trade mark and
- (b) the registered trade mark is assigned or transmitted at the same time and to the same person as the unregistered trade mark, and
- (c) the unregistered trade mark relates to goods in respect of which the registered trade mark is assigned or transmitted.

IMPERIAL ACTS.

31. Restrictions on assignment or transmission where multiple exclusive rights would be created.

(1) Notwithstanding anything in sections 29 and 30, a trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible in a case in which as a result of the assignment or transmission there would in the circumstances subsist, whether under this Act or any other law, exclusive rights in more than one of the persons concerned to the use, in relation to the same goods or description of goods, of trade marks nearly resembling each other or of identical trade marks, if, having regard to the similarity of the goods and of the trade marks, the use of the trade marks in exercise of those rights would be likely to deceive or cause confusion:

Provided that an assignment or transmission shall not be deemed to be invalid under this sub-section if the exclusive rights subsisting as a result thereof in the persons concerned respectively are, having regard to limitations imposed thereon, such as not to be exercisable by two or more of those persons in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, within British India (otherwise than for export therefrom), or in relation to goods to be exported to the same market outside British India.

(2) The proprietor of a registered trade mark who proposes to assign it may submit to the Registrar in the prescribed manner a statement of case setting out the circumstances and the Registrar may issue to him a certificate stating whether, having regard to the similarity of the goods and of the trade marks referred to in the case, the proposed assignment would or would not be invalid under sub-section (1), and a certificate so issued shall, subject to appeal and unless it is shown that the certificate was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, be conclusive as to the validity or invalidity under sub-section (1) of the assignment in so far as such validity or invalidity depends upon the facts set out in the case, but, as regards a certificate in favour of validity, only if application for the registration under section 35 of the title of the person becoming entitled is made within six months from the date on which the certificate is issued.

32. Restrictions on assignment or transmission when exclusive rights would be created in different parts of British India.

Notwithstanding anything in sections 29 and 30, a trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible in a case in which as a result of the assignment or transmission there would in the circumstances subsist, whether under this Act or any other law, an exclusive right in one of the persons concerned to the use of the trade mark limited to use in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, in any place in British India and an exclusive right in another of these persons to the use of a trade mark nearly resembling the first-mentioned trade mark or of an identical trade mark in relation to the same goods or description of goods limited to use in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, in any other place in British India:

Provided that in any such case, on application in the prescribed manner by the proprietor of a trade mark who proposes to assign it, or by a person who claims that a registered trade mark has been transmitted to him or to a predecessor in title of his since the commencement of this Act, the Registrar, if he is satisfied that in all the circumstances the use of the trade mark in exercise of the said rights would not be contrary to the public interest, may approve the assignment or transmission, and an assignment or transmission so approved shall not, unless it is shown that the approval was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, be deemed to be invalid under this section or s. 31 if application for the registration under section 35 of the title of the person becoming entitled is made within six months from the date on which the approval is given or, in the case of a transmission, was made before that date.

33. Conditions for assignment otherwise than in connection with the goodwill of a business.

Where an assignment in respect of any goods of a trade mark which is at the time of the assignment used in a business in those goods, is made after the commencement of this Act otherwise than in connection with the goodwill of that business the assignment shall not take effect unless the assignee, not later than the expiration of six months from the date on which the assignment is made or within such extended period, if any, as the Registrar may allow, applies to the Registrar for directions with respect to the advertisement of the assignment, and advertises it in such form and manner and within such period as the Registrar may direct.

34. Conditions for assignment and transmission of certification trade marks and associated trade marks.

(1) A certification trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible otherwise than with the consent of the Central Government, for which application shall be made in writing in the prescribed manner through the Registrar.

(2) Associated trade marks shall be assignable and transmissible only as a whole and not separately.

35. Registration of assignments and transmissions.

(1) Where a person becomes entitled by assignment or transmission to a registered trade mark, he shall apply in the prescribed manner to the Registrar to register his title, and the Registrar shall on receipt of the application and on proof of title to his satisfaction, register him as the proprietor of the trade mark in respect of the goods in respect of which the assignment or transmission has effect, and shall cause particulars of the assignment or transmission to be entered on the register.

(2) Except for the purposes of an appeal against a decision of the Registrar under sub-section (1) or of an application under section 46, a document or instrument in respect of which no entry has been made in the register in accordance with sub-section (1) shall not be admitted in evidence before any tribunal in proof of the title to a trade mark unless the tribunal otherwise directs.

CHAPTER VI.

USE OF TRADE MARKS AND REGISTERED USERS.

36. Proposed use of trade mark by company to be formed.

(1) No application for the registration of a trade mark in respect of any goods shall be refused, nor shall permission for such registration be withheld, on the ground only that it appears that the applicant does not use or propose to use the trade mark, if the Registrar is satisfied that a company is about to be formed and registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and that the applicant intends to assign the trade mark to that company with a view to the use thereof in relation to those goods by the company.

(2) The tribunal may, in a case to which sub-section (1) applies, require the applicant to give security for the costs of any proceedings relative to any opposition or appeal, and in default of such security being duly given may treat the application as abandoned.

(3) Where in a case to which sub-section (1) applies, a trade mark in respect of any goods is registered in the name of an applicant who relies on intention to assign to a company, then, unless within such period as may be prescribed, or within such further period not exceeding six months as the Registrar may, on application being made to him in the prescribed manner, allow, the company has been registered as the proprietor of the trade mark in respect of those goods, the registration shall cease to have effect in respect thereof at the expiration of that period, and the Registrar shall amend the register accordingly.

37. Removal from register and imposition of limitations on ground of non-use.

(1) Subject to the provisions of section 38, a registered trade mark may be taken off the register in respect of any of the goods in respect of which it is registered on application in the prescribed manner by any person aggrieved to a High Court or to the Registrar, on the ground either—

(a) that the trade mark was registered without any bona fide intention on the part of the applicant for registration that it should be used in relation to those goods by him or, in a case to which the provisions of section 36 apply, by the company concerned, and that there has in fact been no bona fide use of the trade mark in relation to those goods by any proprietor thereof for the time being up to a date one month before the date of the application; or

- (b) that up to a date one month before the date of the application, a continuous period of five years or longer elapsed during which the trade mark was registered and during which there was no bona fide use thereof in relation to those goods by any proprietor thereof for the time being:

Provided that, except where the applicant has been permitted under sub-section (2) of section 10 to register an identical or nearly resembling trade mark in respect of the goods in question or where the tribunal is of opinion that he might properly be permitted so to register such a trade mark, the tribunal may refuse an application made under clause (a) or clause (b) in relation to any goods, if it is shown that there has been, before the relevant date or during the relevant period, as the case may be, bona fide use of the trade mark by any proprietor thereof for the time being in relation to goods of the same description, being goods in respect of which the trade mark is registered.

(2) Where in relation to any goods in respect of which a trade mark is registered—

- (a) the circumstances referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) are shown to exist so far as regards non-use of the trade mark in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in a particular place in British India (otherwise than for export from British India), or in relation to goods to be exported to a particular market outside British India, and

- (b) a person has been permitted under sub-section (2) of section 10 to register an identical or nearly resembling trade mark in respect of those goods under a registration extending to use in relation to goods to be so sold, or otherwise traded in, or in relation to goods to be so exported, or the tribunal is of opinion that he might properly be permitted so to register such a trade mark, on application by that person in the prescribed manner to a High Court or to the Registrar, the tribunal may impose on the registration of the first mentioned trade mark such limitations as it thinks proper for securing that that registration shall cease to extend to such use.

(3) An applicant shall not be entitled to rely for the purpose of clause (b) of sub-section (1) or of sub-section (2) on any non-use of a trade mark which is shown to have been due to special circumstances in the trade and not to any intention to abandon or not to use the trade mark in relation to the goods to which the application relates.

38. Defensive registration of well-known trade marks.

(1) Where a trade mark consisting of any invented word has become so well-known as respects any goods in relation to which it is registered and has been used, that the use thereof in relation to other goods would be likely to be taken as indicating a connection in the course of trade between those goods and a person entitled to use the trade mark in relation to the first-mentioned goods, then, notwithstanding that the proprietor registered in respect of the first-mentioned goods does not use or propose to use the trade mark in relation to those other goods and notwithstanding anything in section 37, the trade mark may on application in the prescribed manner by such proprietor be registered in his name in respect of those other goods as a defensive trade mark and, while so registered, shall not be liable to be taken off the register in respect of those goods under the said section.

(2) The registered proprietor of a trade mark may apply for the registration thereof in respect of any goods as a defensive trade mark notwithstanding that it is already registered in his name in respect of those goods otherwise than as a defensive trade mark, or may apply for the registration thereof in respect of any goods otherwise than as a defensive trade mark notwithstanding that it is already registered in his name in respect of those goods as a defensive trade mark, in lieu in each case of the existing registration.

(3) A trade mark registered as a defensive trade mark and that trade mark as otherwise registered in the name of the same proprietor shall, notwithstanding that the respective registrations are in respect of different goods, be deemed to be, and shall be registered as, associated trade marks.

(4) On application in the prescribed manner by any person aggrieved to a High Court, or to the Registrar, the registration of a trade mark as a defensive trade mark may be cancelled on the ground that the requirements of sub-section (1) are no longer satisfied in respect of any goods in relation to which the trade mark is registered in the name of the same proprietor otherwise than as a defensive trade mark, or may be cancelled as respects any goods in relation to which it is registered as a defensive trade mark on the ground that there is no longer any likelihood that the use of the trade mark in relation to those goods would be taken as giving the indication mentioned in sub-section (1).

(5) The Registrar may at any time cancel the registration as a defensive trade mark of a trade mark of which there is no longer any registration in the name of the same proprietor otherwise than as a defensive trade mark.

(6) Except as otherwise expressly provided in this section, the provisions of this Act shall apply in respect of the registration of the trade marks as defensive trade marks and of trade marks so registered as they apply in other cases.

39. Registered users.

(1) A person other than the proprietor of a trade mark may be registered as a registered user thereof in respect of all or any of the goods in respect of which it is registered (otherwise than as a defensive trade mark) and either with or without conditions or restrictions.

(2) The permitted use of a trade mark shall be deemed to be used by the proprietor thereof, and shall be deemed not to be used by a person other than the proprietor, for any purpose for which such use is material under this Act or any other law.

40. Power of registered user to take proceedings against infringement.

(1) Subject to any agreement subsisting between the parties, a registered user of a trade mark shall be entitled to call upon the proprietor thereof to take proceedings to prevent infringement thereof, and if the proprietor refuses or neglects to do so within three months after being so called upon, the registered user may institute proceedings for infringement in his own name as if he were the proprietor, making the proprietor a defendant.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law, a proprietor so added as defendant shall not be liable for any costs unless he enters an appearance and takes part in the proceedings.

41. Application for registration as registered user.

(1) Where it is proposed that a person should be registered as a registered user of a trade mark, the proprietor and the proposed registered user shall make application in writing to the Registrar in the prescribed manner accompanied by an affidavit made by the proprietor, or by some person authorised to the satisfaction of the Registrar to act on his behalf,—

- (a) giving particulars of the relationship, existing or proposed, between the proprietor and the proposed registered user, including particulars showing the degree of control by the proprietor over the permitted use which their relationship will confer and whether it is a term of their relationship that the proposed registered user shall be the sole registered user or that there shall be any other restriction as to persons for whose registration as registered users application may be made;
- (b) stating the goods in respect of which registration is proposed;
- (c) stating any conditions or restrictions proposed with respect to the characteristics of the goods, to the mode or place of permitted use, or to any other matter;
- (d) stating whether the permitted use is to be for a period or without limit of period, and, if for a period, the duration thereof;

and by such further documents, information or evidence as may be required by the Registrar or as may be prescribed.

(2) When the requirements of sub-section (1) have been complied with, if the Registrar is satisfied that in all the circumstances the use of the trade mark in respect of the proposed goods or any of them by the proposed registered user subject to any conditions or restrictions which the Registrar may think proper, would not be contrary to the public interest, the Registrar may register, subject as aforesaid, the proposed registered user as a registered user in respect of the goods as to which he is so satisfied.

(3) The Registrar shall refuse an application under this section if it appears to him that the grant thereof would tend to facilitate trafficking in a trade mark.

(4) The Registrar shall, if so requested by an applicant, take steps for securing that information given for the purposes of an application under this section (other than matter entered in the register) is not disclosed to rivals in trade.

(5) The Registrar shall issue notice in the prescribed manner—

- (a) of the registration of a person as a registered user, to any other registered user of the trade mark ;
- (b) of an application under section 42, to the registered proprietor, and each registered user, (not being the applicant) of the trade mark.

42. Power to Registrar to vary or cancel registration as registered user.

Without prejudice to the provisions of section 46, the registration of a person as a registered user—

- (a) may be varied by the Registrar as regards the goods in respect of which, or any conditions or restrictions subject to which, it has effect, on the application in writing in the prescribed manner of the registered proprietor of the trade mark ;
- (b) may be cancelled by the Registrar on the application in writing in the prescribed manner of the registered proprietor or of the registered user or of any other registered user of the trade mark ;
- (c) may be cancelled by the Registrar on the application in writing in the prescribed manner of any person on any of the following grounds, namely :—
 - (i) that the registered user has used the trade mark otherwise than by way of the permitted use, or in such a way as to cause or to be likely to cause, deception or confusion ;
 - (ii) that the proprietor or the registered user misrepresented, or failed to disclose, some fact material to the application for the registration, or that the circumstances have materially changed since the date of the registration ;
 - (iii) that the registration ought not to have been effected having regard to rights vested in the applicant by virtue of a contract in the performance of which he is interested ;

- (d) may be cancelled by the Registrar in respect of any goods in relation to which the trade mark is no longer registered.

43. Registered user not to have right of assignment or transmission.

Nothing in this Act shall confer on a registered user of a trade mark any assignable or transmissible right to the use thereof.

44. Use of one of associated or substantially identical trade marks equivalent to use of another.

(1) Where under the provisions of this Act use of a registered trade mark is required to be proved for any purpose, the tribunal may, if and so far as it shall think right, accept use of a registered associated trade mark, or of the trade mark with additions or alterations not substantially affecting its identity, as an equivalent for the use required to be proved.

(2) The use of the whole of a registered trade mark shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to be also a use of any trade mark being a part thereof and registered in accordance with sub-section (1) of section 11 in the name of the same proprietor.

45. Use of trade mark for export trade, and use when form of trade connection changes.

(1) The application in British India of a trade mark to goods to be exported from British India, and any other act done in British India in relation to goods to be so exported which, if done in relation to goods to be sold or otherwise traded in within British India would constitute use of a trade mark therein, shall be deemed to constitute use of the trade mark in relation to those goods for any purpose for which such use is material under this Act or any other law.

(2) The use of a registered trade mark in relation to goods between which and the person using the mark any form of connection in the course of trade subsists shall not be deemed to be likely to cause deception or confusion on the ground only that the mark has been or is used in relation to goods between which and the person using the mark or any predecessor in his business different form of connection in the course of trade subsisted or subsists.

CHAPTER VII.

RECTIFICATION AND CORRECTION OF THE REGISTER.

46. Power to cancel or vary registration and to rectify the register.

(1) On application in the prescribed manner by any person aggrieved to a High Court or to the Registrar, the tribunal may make such order as it may think fit for cancelling or varying the registration of a trade mark on the ground of any contravention of, or failure to observe a condition entered on the register in relation thereto.

(2) Any person aggrieved by the absence or omission from the register of any entry, or by any entry made in the register without sufficient cause, or by any entry wrongly remaining on the register, or by any error or defect in any entry in the register, may apply in the prescribed manner to a High Court or to the Registrar, and the tribunal may make such order for making, expunging or varying the entry as it may think fit.

(3) The tribunal may in any proceeding under this section decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide in connection with the rectification of the register.

(4) A High Court or the Registrar, of its or his own motion, may, after giving notice in the prescribed manner to the parties concerned and after giving them an opportunity of being heard, make any order referred to in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2).

(5) Any order of the Court rectifying the register shall direct that notice of the rectification shall be served upon the Registrar in the prescribed manner who shall upon receipt of such notice rectify the register accordingly.

47. Correction of register.

(1) The Registrar may, on application made in the prescribed manner by the registered proprietor,—

- (a) correct any error in the name, address or description of the registered proprietor of a trade mark;
- (b) enter any change in the name, address or description of the person who is registered as proprietor of a trade mark;
- (c) cancel the entry of a trade mark on the register;
- (d) strike out any goods or classes of goods from those in respect of which a trade mark is registered;
- (e) enter a disclaimer or memorandum relating to a trade mark which does not in any way extend the rights given by the existing registration of the trade mark.

(2) The Registrar may, on application made in the prescribed manner by a registered user of a trade mark, correct any error, or enter any change, in the name, address or description of the registered user.

48. Alteration of registered trade mark.

(1) The registered proprietor of a trade mark may apply in the prescribed manner to the Registrar for leave to add to or alter the trade mark in any manner not substantially affecting the identity thereof, and the Registrar may refuse leave or may grant it on such terms and subject to such limitations as he may think fit.

(2) The Registrar may cause an application under this section to be advertised in the prescribed manner in any case where it appears to him that it is expedient so to do, and where he does so, if within the prescribed time from the date of the advertisement any person gives notice to the Registrar in the prescribed manner of opposition to the application, the Registrar shall, after hearing the parties if so required, decide the matter.

(3) Where leave is granted under this section, the trade mark as altered shall be advertised in the prescribed manner, unless the application has already been advertised under sub-section (2).

49. Adaptation of entries in register to amended or substituted classification of goods.

(1) The Registrar shall not, in exercise of any power conferred on him under clause (a) of sub-section (2) of section 84, make any amendment of the register which would have the effect of adding any goods or classes of goods to those in respect of which a trade mark is registered (whether in one or more classes) immediately before the amendment is to be made, or of antedating the registration of a trade mark in respect of any goods;

Provided that this sub-section shall not apply when the Registrar is satisfied that compliance therewith would involve undue complexity and that the addition or antedating, as the case may be, would not affect any substantial quantity of goods and would not substantially prejudice the rights of any person.

(2) A proposal so to amend the register shall be notified to the registered proprietor of the trade mark affected and advertised in the prescribed manner, and may be opposed before the Registrar by any person aggrieved on the ground that the proposed amendment contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1).

CHAPTER VIII.

CERTIFICATION TRADE MARKS.

50. Provisions of this Act applicable to certification trade marks.

Subject to the provisions of this Chapter, the other provisions of this Act except sections 6, 21, 22, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42 and 43 and sub-section (2) of s. 45 shall apply to certification trade marks as they apply to trade marks.

51. Certification trade mark not to be registered in name of person trading in goods certified thereby.

A mark shall not be registrable as a certification trade mark in the name of a person who carries on a trade in goods of the kind certified.

52. Determination whether a mark is a certification trade mark.

In determining whether a mark is adapted to distinguish in accordance with the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 2, the tribunal may have regard to the extent to which—

- (a) the mark is inherently so adapted to distinguish in relation to the goods in question; and
- (b) by reason of the use of the mark or of any other circumstances, the mark is in fact so adapted to distinguish in relation to the goods in question.

53. Application for registration.

(1) An application for the registration of a mark as a certification trade mark shall be made to the Registrar in writing in the prescribed manner by the person proposed to be registered as the proprietor thereof, and accompanied by a draft of the regulations to be deposited under section 56.

(2) The provisions of section 14 shall have effect in relation to an application under this section as they have effect in relation to an application under the said section, except that for references therein to acceptance of an application there shall be substituted references to authorisation to proceed with the application.

(3) In dealing under the said provisions with an application under this section, the tribunal shall have regard to the like considerations, so far as relevant, as if the application were an application under section 14 and to any other considerations (not being matters within the competence of the Central Government under section 54) relevant to applications under this section, including the desirability of securing that a certification trade mark shall comprise some indication that it is a certification trade mark.

54. Consideration of application for registration by Central Government.

When authorisation to proceed with an application under s. 53 has been given, the Registrar shall forward the application to the Central Government who shall consider the application with regard to the following matters, namely:—

- (a) whether the applicant is competent to certify the goods in respect of which the mark is to be registered;
- (b) whether the draft of the regulations to be deposited under section 56 is satisfactory;
- (c) whether in all the circumstances the registration applied for would be to the public advantage; and may either—

- (i) direct that the application shall not be accepted; or
- (ii) direct the Registrar to accept the application and approve the said draft of the regulations either without modification and unconditionally or subject to any conditions or limitations, or to any amendments or modification of the application or of the regulations, which it thinks requisite having regard to any of the said matters;

but, except in the case of a direction for acceptance and approval without modification and unconditionally, the Central Government shall not decide the matter without giving to the applicant an opportunity of being heard:

Provided that the Central Government may, at the request of the applicant made with the concurrence of the Registrar, consider the application with regard to any of the said matters before authorisation to proceed with the application has been given, so however that the Central Government shall be at liberty to reconsider any matter on which it has given a decision under this proviso if any amendment or modification is thereafter made in the application or in the draft of the regulations.

55. Opposite on to registration.

(1) When an application has been accepted, the Registrar shall, as soon as may be thereafter, cause the application as accepted to be advertised in the prescribed manner, and the provisions of section 15 shall have effect in relation to the registration of the mark as if the application had been an application under section 14:

Provided that, in deciding under the said provisions the tribunal shall have regard only to the considerations referred to in sub-section (3) of section 53, and a decision under the said provisions in favour of the applicant shall be conditional on the determination in his favour by the Central Government under sub-section (2) of this section of any opposition relating to any of the matters referred to in section 54.

(2) When notice of opposition is given relating to any of the matters referred to in section 54, the Central Government shall, after hearing the parties, if so required, and considering any evidence, decide whether, and subject to what conditions or limitations, or amendments or modifications, if any, of the application or of the regulations to be deposited under section 56, registration is, having regard to those matters, to be permitted.

56. Deposit of regulations governing the use of a certification trade mark.

(1) There shall be deposited at the Patent Office in respect of every mark registered as a certification trade mark regulations approved by the Central Government for governing the use thereof, which shall include provisions as to the cases in which the proprietor is to certify goods and to authorise the use of the certification trade mark, and may contain any other provisions which the Central Government may by general or special order require or permit to be inserted therein (including provisions conferring a right of appeal to the Registrar against any refusal of the proprietor to certify goods or to authorise the use of the certification trade mark in accordance with the regulations); and regulations so deposited shall be open to inspection in like manner as the register.

(2) The regulations so deposited may on the application of the registered proprietor be altered by the Registrar with the consent of the Central Government.

(3) The Central Government may cause such application to be advertised in any case where it appears to it expedient so to do, and where it does so, if within the time specified in the advertisement any person gives notice of opposition to the application, the Central Government shall not decide the matter without giving the parties an opportunity of being heard.

57. Right conferred by registration.

Subject to the provisions of sections 25, 26 and 58, the registration of a person as proprietor of a certification trade mark in respect of any goods shall, if valid, give to that person the exclusive right to the use of the certification trade mark in relation to those goods, and, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, that right shall be deemed to be infringed by any person who, not being the proprietor of the mark or a person authorised by him in that behalf under the regulations deposited under section 56, using it in accordance therewith, uses a mark identical with it or so nearly resembling it as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion, in the course of trade, in relation to any goods in respect of which it is registered, and in such manner as to render the use of the mark likely to be taken either—

- (a) as being use as a certification trade mark; or
- (b) to import a reference to some person having the right either as proprietor, or by his authorisation under the said regulations, to use the mark, or to goods certified by the proprietor.

58. No infringement in certain circumstances.

(1) The right to the use of a certification trade mark given under s. 57 by registration shall be subject to any conditions or limitations entered on the register, and shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid in any mode, in relation to goods to be sold or otherwise traded in in any place, in relation to goods to be exported to any market, or in any other circumstances, to which having regard to any such limitations, the registration does not extend.

IMPERIAL ACTS.

(2) The said right to the use of a certification trade mark shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid by any person—

(a) in relation to goods certified by the proprietor of the mark if, as to those goods or a bulk of which they form part, the proprietor or another in accordance with his authorisation under the relevant regulations has applied the mark and has not subsequently removed or obliterated it, or the proprietor has at any time expressly or impliedly consented to the use of the mark, or

(b) in relation to goods adapted to form part of, or to be accessory to, other goods in relation to which the mark has been used without infringement of the right given as aforesaid or might for the time being be so used, if the use of the mark is reasonably necessary in order to indicate that the goods are so adapted and neither the purpose nor the effect of the use of the mark is to indicate otherwise than in accordance with the fact that the goods are certified by the proprietor :

Provided that clause (a) shall not apply to the case of use consisting of the application of any such mark as aforesaid to any goods, notwithstanding that they are such goods as are mentioned in that clause if such application is contrary to the said regulations.

(3) Where a certification trade mark is one of two or more registered certification trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other, the use of any of those marks in exercise of the right to the use of that mark given by registration, shall not be deemed to be an infringement of the right so given to the use of any other of those marks.

59. Cancellation or varying of registration.

(1) The Central Government may, on the application in the prescribed manner of any person aggrieved or on the recommendation of the Registrar, and after giving the proprietor an opportunity of opposing the application or recommendation, make such order as it thinks fit for expunging or varying any entry in the register relating to a certification trade mark, or for varying the deposited regulations, on any of the following grounds, namely :

(a) that the proprietor is no longer competent, in the case of any of the goods in respect of which the mark is registered, to certify those goods;

(b) that the proprietor has failed to observe any provision of the deposited regulations to be observed on his part ;

(c) that it is no longer to the public advantage that the mark should be registered ;

(d) that it is requisite for the public advantage that if the mark remains registered, the regulations should be varied ; and neither a High Court nor the Registrar shall have any jurisdiction to make an order under section 46 on any of those grounds.

(2) The Registrar shall rectify the register and the deposited regulations in such manner as may be requisite for giving effect to an order made under sub-section (1).

60. Costs not to be awarded in certain cases.

The Registrar shall have no power to award costs to or against any party on an appeal to him against a refusal of the proprietor of a certification trade mark to certify goods or to authorise the use of the mark.

61. Decisions of Central Government to be final.

Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Chapter, every decision of the Central Government under this Chapter shall be final.

CHAPTER IX.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR TEXTILE GOODS.

62. Textile goods.

The Central Government shall prescribe classes of goods (in this Chapter referred to as textile goods) to the trade marks used in relation to which the provisions of this Chapter shall apply; and subject to the said provisions, the other provisions of this Act shall apply to such trade marks as they apply to trade marks used in relation to other classes of goods.

63. Branch of Trade Marks Registry at Bombay and Textile Marks Record.

(1) There shall be established at Bombay, for the purpose of facilitating the registration of trade marks in respect of textile goods, a branch of the Trade Marks Registry. The officer in charge of the branch shall be called the Deputy Registrar.

(2) There shall be kept at the said branch for the purposes of this Act a record called the Textile Marks Record wherein shall be entered copies of all entries in the register relating to trade marks registered in respect of textile goods and the said record shall at all convenient times be open to the inspection of the public, subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be prescribed.

(3) Trade marks in respect of textile goods of which registration has been refused shall be entered in a list called the Refused Textile Marks List, a copy of which shall be kept at the said branch, and the list and the said copy shall at all convenient times be open to the inspection of the public, subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be prescribed.

64. Restrictions on registration of piece goods.

In respect of textile goods being piece goods—

- (a) no mark consisting of a line heading alone shall be registrable as a trade mark;
- (b) a line heading shall not be deemed to be adapted to distinguish;
- (c) the registration of a trade mark shall not give any exclusive right to the use of a line heading;

(d) the registration of letters or numerals, or any combination thereof, shall be subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be prescribed.

65. Registration.

(1) Applications for the registration of a trade mark in respect of textile goods may be made either to the Registrar or the Deputy Registrar at the option of the applicant.

(2) In respect of all trade marks, applications for registration of which are duly made to the Deputy Registrar under this chapter, the Deputy Registrar shall exercise all the powers of the Registrar under this Act but shall be subject to the general superintendence of the Registrar.

66. Advisory Committees.

(1) The Central Government may in the prescribed manner constitute one or more Advisory Committees of persons versed in the usages of the textile trade for the purpose of this section.

(2) The Registrar or the Deputy Registrar shall consult any such Committee with respect to any circumstances peculiar to the textile trade arising on an application to register a trade mark in respect of textile goods.

(3) The place of meeting and the conduct of business of such Committees shall be determined by rules made under this Act.

CHAPTER X.

OFFENCES AND RESTRAINT OF USE OF ROYAL ARMS AND STATE EMBLEMS.

67. Penalty for falsification of entries in register.

If any person makes, or causes to be made, a false entry in the register, or a writing falsely purporting to be a copy of an entry in the register, or produces or tenders, or causes to be produced or tendered, in evidence any such writing knowing the entry or writing to be false, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

68. Penalty for falsely representing a trade mark as registered.

(1) From such date, not being earlier than one year from the commencement of this Act as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint in this behalf, no person shall make any representation—

- (a) with respect to a mark not being a registered trade mark, to the effect that it is a registered trade mark; or

(b) with respect to a part of a registered trade mark not being a part separately registered as a trade mark, to the effect that it is separately registered as a trade mark; or

(c) to the effect that a registered trade mark is registered in respect of any goods in respect of which it is not in fact registered; or

(d) to the effect that the registration of a trade mark give an exclusive right to the use thereof in any circumstances in which, having regard to limitations entered on the register, the registration does not in fact give that right.

(2) If any person contravenes any of the provisions of sub-section (1), he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the use in British India in relation to a trade mark of the word "registered", or of any other expression referring whether expressly or impliedly to registration, shall be deemed to import a reference to registration in the register, except—

(a) where that word or other expression is used in direct association with other words delineated in characters at least as large as those in which that word or other expression is delineated and indicating that the reference is to registration as a trade mark under the law of a country outside British India, being a country under the law of which the registration referred to is in fact in force; or

(b) where that other expression is of itself such as to indicate that the reference is to such registration as is mentioned in clause (a); or

(c) where that word is used in relation to a mark registered as a trade mark under the law of a country outside British India and in relation solely to goods to be exported to that country.

69. Restraint of use of Royal Arms and State emblems.

If a person, without due authority, uses in connection with any trade, business calling or profession—

(a) the Royal Arms (or arms so closely resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive) in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that he is duly authorised so to use the Royal Arms, or

(b) any device, emblem or title in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that he is employed by, or supplies goods to, or is connected with, His Majesty's Government or the Central Government or any Provincial Government or any department of any such Government, he may, at the suit of any person who is authorised to use such Arms or such device, emblem or title or of the Registrar, be restrained by injunction from continuing so to use the same.

CHAPTER XI.

MISCELLANEOUS.

70. Procedure before the Registrar.

In all proceedings under this Act before the Registrar—

(a) the Registrar shall have all the powers of a Civil Court for the purposes of receiving evidence, administering oaths, enforcing the attendance of witnesses, compelling the discovery and production of documents and issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses;

(b) evidence shall be given by affidavit, provided that the Registrar may, if he thinks fit, take oral evidence in lieu of, or in addition to, such evidence by affidavit;

(c) the Registrar shall not exercise any power vested in him by this Act or the rules made thereunder adversely to any party duly appearing before him without (if required in writing within the prescribed time so to do) giving such party an opportunity of being heard;

(d) the Registrar may, save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, and subject to any rules made in this behalf under section 84, make such orders as to costs as he considers reasonable, and any such order shall be executable as a decree of a Civil Court.

71. Procedure before Central Government.

In all proceedings under this Act before the Central Government, evidence shall be given by affidavit, provided that the Central Government may, if it thinks fit, take oral evidence in lieu of, or in addition to, such evidence by affidavit, and shall for that purpose have all the powers of a Civil Court referred to in clause (a) of section 70.

72. Procedure in certain cases of option to apply to a High Court or the Registrar.

Where under this Act an applicant has the option of making an application either to a High Court or to the Registrar,—

- (a) if any suit or other proceedings concerning the trade mark in question is pending before a High Court or a District Court, the application shall be made to that High Court or, as the case may be, to the High Court within whose jurisdiction that District Court is situated;
- (b) if in any other case the application is made to the Registrar, the Registrar may, if he thinks fit, refer the application at any stage of the proceedings to a High Court.

73. Suits for infringement to be instituted before District Court.

No suit for the infringement of a trade mark or otherwise relating to any right in a trade mark shall be instituted in any Court inferior to a District Court having jurisdiction to try the suit.

74. Appearance of Registrar in proceedings involving rectification of register.

(1) In any suit or other legal proceeding in which the relief sought includes alternation or rectification of the register, the Registrar shall have the right to appear and be heard, and shall appear if so directed by the tribunal.

(2) Unless the tribunal otherwise directs, the Registrar may, in lieu of appearing, submit a statement in writing signed by him, giving such particulars as he thinks proper of the proceedings before him relating to the matter in issue, or of the grounds of any decision given by him affecting it, or of the practice of the Patent Office in like cases, or of other matters relevant to the issues and within his knowledge as Registrar, and such statement shall be evidence in the suit or other proceeding.

(3) The costs of the Registrar shall be in the discretion of the tribunal, but the Registrar shall not be ordered to pay the costs of any of the parties.

75. Evidence of entries in register and things done by Registrar.

(1) A printed or written copy of any entry in the register, purporting to be certified by the Registrar and sealed with the seal of the Patent Office, shall be admitted in evidence in all Courts in British India and in all proceedings without further proof of production of the original.

(2) A certificate purporting to be under the hand of the Registrar as to any entry, matter or thing that he is authorised by this Act or the rules to make or do shall be prima facie evidence of the entry having been made, and of the contents thereof, or of the matter or thing having been done or not done.

(1) Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, an appeal shall lie, within the period prescribed by the Central Government, from any decision of the Registrar or Deputy Registrar under this Act or the rules made thereunder to the High Court having jurisdiction:

Provided that if any suit or other proceeding concerning the trade mark in question is pending before a High Court or a District Court, the appeal shall be made to that High Court or, as the case may be, to the High Court within whose jurisdiction that District Court is situated.

(2) In an appeal by an applicant for registration against a decision of the Registrar under section 13 or section 14 or section 15, it shall not be open, save with the express permission of the Court to the Registrar or any party opposing the appeal to advance grounds other than those recorded in the said decision or advanced by the party in the proceedings before the Registrar, as the case may be; and where any such additional grounds are advanced, the applicant for registration may, on giving notice in the prescribed manner, withdraw his application without being liable to pay the costs of the Registrar or the parties opposing his application.

(3) Subject to the provisions of this Act and of rules made thereunder, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall apply to appeals before a High Court under this Act.

77. Power to High Courts to make rules.

A High Court may make rules consistent with this Act as to the conduct and procedure of all proceedings under this Act before it.

78. Certificate of validity.

If in any legal proceeding in which the validity of the registration of a trade mark comes into question, a decision is given in favour of the proprietor of the trade mark, the tribunal may grant a certificate to that effect, and if such a certificate is granted, then in any subsequent legal proceeding in which the said validity comes into question, the said proprietor on obtaining a final order or judgment in his favour shall, unless the said final order or judgment for sufficient reason directs otherwise, be entitled to his full costs, charges and expenses as between legal practitioner and client.

79. Trade usage, etc., to be taken into consideration.

In any suit or other proceeding relating to a trade mark, the tribunal shall admit evidence of the usages of the trade concerned and of any relevant trade mark or get up legitimately used by other persons.

80. Agents.

Where by or under this Act any act, other than the making of an affidavit, is required to be done by any person, the act may, subject to prescribed conditions or in special cases with the consent of the Central Government, be done, in lieu of by that person himself, by a duly authorised agent, being either a legal practitioner or a person registered in the prescribed manner as a trade marks agent.

81. Fees.

There shall be paid in respect of applications and registration and other matters under this Act such fees as may be prescribed by the Central Government.

82. Crown to be bound.

The provisions of this Act shall be binding on the Crown.

83. Power to make reciprocal arrangements with other Governments.

If at any time after the expiry of six months from the commencement of this section it is made to appear to the Central Government that any Government outside British India has made satisfactory provision for the protection within its territories of trade marks in respect of which an application for registration has been made in British India, the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make provision with regard to trade marks in respect of which an application for registration has been made within the territories of that Government to enable any person who has applied within such territories for registration of a trade mark or his legal representative or assignee to obtain registration of the trade mark in British India under this Act on his making an application for registration in British India within such period as may be fixed in this behalf by the notification as if an application for registration under this Act had been made in respect of that trade mark at the date at which the application for registration was made within the territories of that Government.

84. Power of Central Government to make rules.

(1) The Central Government may, subject to the condition of previous publication by notification in the official Gazette, make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

- (a) prescribe the classification of goods for the purpose of the registration of trade marks, and empower the Registrar to amend the register so far as may be necessary for the purpose of adapting the entries therein to any amended or substituted classification which may be prescribed ;
- (b) require the making of duplicates of trade marks and other documents connected therewith ;
- (c) provide for securing and regulating the publication, sale or distribution of copies of trade marks and other documents connected therewith ;
- (d) prescribe additional matters to be entered in the register ;
- (e) prescribe the conditions and restrictions subject to which the register, the Textile Marks Record and the Refused Textile Marks List may be inspected ;
- (f) prescribe the form of certificates of registration ;
- (g) prescribe the conditions under which a trade mark removed from the register may be restored under subsection (3) of section 18 ;
- (h) prescribe the further documents, information or evidence to accompany an application under subsection (1) of section 41 ;
- (i) prescribe classes of goods as textile goods for the purposes of Chapter IX ;
- (j) provide for the constitution of Advisory

Committees referred to in section 66, and prescribe the places of meeting, and conduct of business at meetings, of such Committees ;

- (k) regulate the awarding of costs by the Registrar under section 70 ;
- (l) prescribe the conditions subject to which an agent referred to in section 80 may act ;
- (m) prescribe the fees to be paid under this Act ;
- (n) provide for the establishment of branches of the Trade Marks Registry when expedient for facilitating the working of this Act, and authorise the preparation of copies of the register to be kept at such branch offices ;
- (o) prescribe the manner in which, in proceedings under this Act before the Central Government or the Registrar, applications shall be made, notices given and matters advertised ;
- (p) prescribe times or periods required by this Act to be prescribed ;
- (q) provide, generally, for regulating the business of the Trade Marks Registry and of branches established under clause (n) or under section 63, and for regulating all things by this Act placed under the direction or control of the Central Government or the Registrar.

85. Power to Central Government to make provision for applications for registration before the coming into force of the remaining provisions of Act.

The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette provide such procedure as it considers expedient to enable intending applicants to deposit trade marks at the Patent Office before the coming into force of the remaining provisions of this Act ;

Provided that the deposit of a trade mark under this section shall not affect any right, existing or accruing, in the trade mark.

THE INDIAN COINAGE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1940

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 11th March, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 16th March, 1940.

An Act further to amend the Indian Coinage Act, 1906.

Whereas it is expedient further to amend the Indian Coinage Act, 1906, for the purpose hereinafter appearing ;

It is hereby enacted as follows :—

1. Short title.

This Act may be called the Indian Coinage (Amendment) Act, 1940.

2. Amendment of section 5 of Act III of 1906.

For section 5 of the Indian Coinage Act, 1906 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), the following section shall be substituted, namely :

"5. Standard weight and fineness.

- (1) The standard weight of the Government rupee shall be one hundred and eighty grains troy.
- (2) The other silver coins shall be of proportionate weight.
- (3) The standard fineness of the Government rupee shall be as follows, namely, eleven-twelfths, or one hundred and sixty-five grains of fine silver, and one-twelfth, or fifteen grains of alloy ; of the half-rupee, eleven-twelfths, or eighty-two and a half grains of fine silver, and one twelfth, or seven and a half grains of alloy ; and of the quarter-rupee, one-half, or twenty-two and a half grains of fine silver, and one-half, or twenty-two and a half grains of alloy.
- (4) In the making of silver coins, a remedy shall be allowed of an amount not exceeding the following, namely :—

Remedy in weight.

Remedy in fineness.

Rupee	}	Five-thousandths	Two thousandths.
Half-rupee
Quarter-rupee		Nine-thousandths	Five-thousandths.

and in applying the said remedies to quarter-rupees the remedies shall be applied to the average of one hundred coins and not to individual coins."

3. Amendment of section 15, Act III of 1906.

To section 15 of the said Act the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

"(3) All quarter-rupee silver coins which may have been issued under this Act prior to the commencement of the Indian Coinage (Amendment) Act, 1940, shall continue to be a legal tender in payment or on account for any sum not exceeding one rupee at the rate of four for a rupee."

ACT NO. VII of 1940

THE RESERVE BANK OF INDIA (CLOSING OF ANNUAL ACCOUNTS) ACT, 1940.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 11th March, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 16th March, 1940.

An Act to facilitate the changing of the date on which the annual accounts of the Reserve Bank of India are closed.

Whereas it is expedient that certain provisions should be made to facilitate the changing of the date on which the annual accounts of the Reserve Bank of India are closed;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. Short title and extent.

(1) This Act may be called the Reserve Bank of India (Closing of Annual Accounts) Act, 1940.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

2. Definition.

In this Act "the Bank" means the Reserve Bank of India constituted by the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934.

3. Power to close accounts at expiry of period of six months.

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, or the regulations made under s. 58 thereof the Bank may, for the purpose of facilitating the changing of the date on which the annual accounts of the Bank are closed, close its accounts as at the close of business on the 30th day of June, 1940, and convene a general meeting (which shall be annual general meeting within the meaning of the said Act) at a place where there is an office of the Bank within six weeks from the date on which the accounts are closed:

Provided that this general meeting shall not be held at the same place as that at which the immediately preceding annual general meeting was held.

4. Application of Act II of 1934 when accounts are closed under section 3.

References in sub-section (2) of section 14, section 52 and sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 53 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, to annual accounts, annual balance-sheet, the auditors' report upon the annual balance-sheet and accounts, and the report of the Central Board on the working of the Bank throughout the year, shall be deemed to include references to the accounts, balance-sheet, auditors' report and the report of the Central Board in respect of a period of six months ending on the 30th day of June, 1940.

5. Interpretation of section 47, Act II of 1934.

For the purposes of section 47 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, the net profits of the Bank for the period of six months ending on the 30th day of June, 1940, shall be deemed to be "net annual profits" but the cumulative dividend referred to in that section as payable out of such profits shall be payable at the rate of one and three quarter per cent.

6. Power to make regulations.

The Central Board of Directors of the Bank may, with the previous sanction of the Central Government, make regulations to provide for any matter for which provision is necessary or convenient in connection with the changing of the date on which the annual accounts of the Bank are closed, and in particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power for the manner in which the amount, if any, of the additional dividend referred to in section 47 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, shall be calculated in respect of the period of six months ending on the 30th day of June, 1940.

ACT No. VIII of 1940THE INDIAN EMIGRATION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1940

An Act further to amend the Indian Emigration Act, 1922.

Whereas it is expedient further to amend the Indian Emigration Act, 1922, for the purposes hereinafter appearing ;

It is hereby enacted as follows :

1. Short title.

This Act may be called the Indian Emigration (Amendment) Act, 1940.

2. Amendment of section 29, Act VII of 1922.

In section 29 of the Indian Emigration Act, 1922 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), for the words "may be exercised by those officers for the prevention of offences against this Act" the following shall be substituted, namely :

"may be exercised, for the prevention of offences against this Act, by any such officer, or by a Protector of Emigrants, or a person appointed under section 5".

3. Amendment of section 30-A, Act VII of 1922.

To section 30-A of the said Act the following sub-section shall be added, namely :—

"(5) If any person commits an offence under this section, any police officer may arrest him without warrant."

ACT No. IX of 1940.THE RESERVE BANK OF INDIA (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1940.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 11th March, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV dated 16th March, 1940.

An Act further to amend the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934.

Whereas it is expedient further to amend the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, for the purpose of enabling the Reserve Bank of India to act as agent of, and make loans and advances to, the Board of Commissioners of Currency of Ceylon ;

It is hereby enacted as follows :—

1. Short title.

This Act may be called the Reserve Bank of India (Amendment) Act, 1940.

2. Amendment of section 17 of Act II of 1934.

In section 17 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934,—

(a) in clause (4), as adapted and modified by the Third Schedule to the India and Burma (Burma Monetary Arrangements) Order, 1937, for the words "and Burma co-operative banks" the words "Burma co-operative banks and the principal currency authority of Ceylon" shall be substituted ;

(b) in clause (13), the words "a bank which is" shall be omitted, and for the words "such banks" the words "banks which are such principal currency authorities" shall be substituted.

ACT No. X of 1940.THE ARBITRATION ACT, 1940.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 11th March, 1940, and is published in the Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 16th March, 1940.

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to Arbitration.

Whereas it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to arbitration in British India ;

It is hereby enacted as follows :—

CHAPTER I.INTRODUCTORY.*1. Short title, extent and commencement.

(1) This Act may be called the Arbitration Act, 1940.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

(3) It shall come into force on the 1st day of July, 1940.

2. Definitions.

In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "arbitration agreement" means a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not ;

(b) "award" means an arbitration award ;

IMPERIAL ACTS.

- (c) "Court" means a Civil Court having jurisdiction to decide the questions forming the subject-matter of the reference if the same had been the subject-matter of a suit, but does not, except for the purpose of arbitration proceedings under section 21, include a Small Cause Court;
- (d) "legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, and, where a party acts in a representative character, the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so acting;
- (e) "reference" means a reference to arbitration.

ARBITRATION WITHOUT INTERVENTION OF A COURT.

3. Provisions implied in arbitration agreement.

An arbitration agreement, unless a different intention is expressed therein, shall be deemed to include the provisions set out in the First Schedule in so far as they are applicable to the reference.

4. Agreement that arbitrators be appointed by third party.

The parties to an arbitration agreement may agree that any reference thereunder shall be to an arbitrator or arbitrators to be appointed by a person designated in the agreement either by name or as the holder for the time being of any office or appointment.

5. Authority of appointed arbitrator or umpire irrevocable except by leave of Court.

The authority of an appointed arbitrator or umpire shall not be revocable except with the leave of the Court, unless a contrary intention is expressed in the arbitration agreement.

6. Arbitration agreement not to be discharged by death of party thereto.

(1) An arbitration agreement shall not be discharged by the death of any party thereto, either as respects the deceased or any other party, but shall in such event be enforceable by or against the legal representative of the deceased.

(2) The authority of an arbitrator shall not be revoked by the death of any party by whom he was appointed.

(3) Nothing in this section shall affect the operation of any law by virtue of which any right of action is extinguished by the death of a person.

7. Provisions in case of insolvency.

(1) Where it is provided by a term in a contract to which an insolvent is a party that any differences arising thereout or in connection therewith shall be referred to arbitration, the said term shall, if the receiver adopts the contract, be enforceable by or against him so far as it relates to any such differences.

(2) Where a person who has been adjudged an insolvent had, before the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, become a party to an arbitration agreement, and any matter to which the agreement applies is required to be determined in connection with, or for the purposes of, the insolvency proceedings, then, if the case is one to which sub-section (1) does not apply, any other party to the agreement or the receiver may apply to the Court having jurisdiction in the insolvency proceedings for an order directing that the matter in question shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the agreement, and the Court may, if it is of opinion that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the matter ought to be determined by arbitration, make an order accordingly.

(3) In this section the expression "receiver" includes an Official Assignee.

8 Power of Court to appoint arbitrator or umpire.

(1) In any of the following cases—

(a) where an arbitration agreement provides that the reference shall be to one or more arbitrators to be appointed by consent of the parties, and all the parties do not, after differences have arisen, concur in the appointment or appointments; or

(b) if any appointed arbitrator or umpire neglects or refuses to act, or is incapable of acting, or dies, and the arbitration agreement does not show that it was intended that the vacancy should not be supplied, and the parties or the arbitrators, as the case may be, do not supply the vacancy; or any party may serve the other parties or the arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to concur in the appointment or appointments or in supplying the vacancy.

(c) where the parties or the arbitrators are required to appoint an umpire and do not appoint him;

(2) If the appointment is not made within fifteen clear days after the service of the said notice, the Court may, on the application of the party who gave the notice and after giving the other parties an opportunity of being heard, appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators or umpire, as the case may be, who shall have like power to act in the reference and to make an award as if he or they had been appointed by consent of all parties.

9. Power to party to appoint new arbitrator or, in certain cases, a sole arbitrator.

Where an arbitration agreement provides that a reference shall be to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, then, unless a different intention is expressed in the agreement,—

(a) if either of the appointed arbitrators neglects or refuses to act, or is incapable of acting, or dies, the party who appointed him may appoint a new arbitrator in his place;

(b) if one party fails to appoint an arbitrator, either originally or by way of substitution as aforesaid, for fifteen clear days after the service by the other party of a notice in writing to make the appointment, such other party having appointed his arbitrator before giving the notice, the party who has appointed an arbitrator may appoint that arbitrator to act as sole arbitrator in the reference, and his award shall be binding on both parties as if he had been appointed by consent;

Provided that the Court may set aside any appointment as sole arbitrator made under clause (b) and either, on sufficient cause being shown, allow further time to the defaulting party to appoint an arbitrator or pass such other order as it thinks fit.

Explanation.—The fact that an arbitrator or umpire, after a request by either party to enter on and proceed with the reference, does not within one month comply with the request may constitute a neglect or refusal to act within the meaning of section 8 and this section.

10. Provisions as to appointment of three or more arbitrators.

(1) Where an arbitration agreement provides that a reference shall be to three arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party and the third by the two appointed arbitrators, the agreement shall have effect as if it provided for the appointment of an umpire, and not for the appointment of a third arbitrator, by the two arbitrators appointed by the parties.

(2) Where an arbitration agreement provides that a reference shall be to three arbitrators to be appointed otherwise than as mentioned in sub-section (1), the award of the majority shall, unless the arbitration agreement otherwise provides, prevail.

(3) Where an arbitration agreement provides for the appointment of more arbitrators than three, the award of the majority, or if the arbitrators are equally divided in their opinions, the award of the umpire shall, unless the arbitration agreement otherwise provides, prevail.

11. Power to Court to remove arbitrators or umpire in certain circumstances.

(1) The Court may, on the application of any party to a reference, remove an arbitrator or umpire who fails to use all reasonable dispatch in entering on and proceeding with the reference and making an award.

(2) The Court may remove an arbitrator or umpire who has misconducted himself or the proceedings.

(3) Where an arbitrator or umpire is removed under this section, he shall not be entitled to receive any remuneration in respect of his services.

(4) For the purposes of this section the expression "proceeding with the reference" includes, in a case where reference to the umpire becomes necessary, giving notice of that fact to the parties and to the umpire.

12. Power of Court where arbitrator is removed or his authority revoked.

(1) Where the Court removes an umpire who has not entered on the reference or one or more arbitrators (not being all the arbitrators), the Court may, on the application of any party to the arbitration agreement, appoint persons to fill the vacancies.

(2) Where the authority of an arbitrator or arbitrators or an umpire is revoked by leave of the Court, or where the Court removes an umpire who has entered on the reference or a sole arbitrator or all the arbitrators, the Court may, on the application of any party to the arbitration agreement, either—

(a) appoint a person to act as sole arbitrator in the place of the person or persons displaced, or

(b) order that the arbitration agreement shall cease to have effect with respect to the difference referred.

(3) A person appointed under this section as an arbitrator or umpire shall have the like power to act in the reference and to make an award as if he had been appointed in accordance with the arbitration agreement.

13. Powers of arbitrator.

The arbitrators or umpire shall, unless a different intention is expressed in the agreement, have power to—

(a) administer oath to the parties and witnesses appearing ;

(b) state a special case for the opinion of the Court on any question of law involved, or state the award, wholly or in part, in the form of a special case of such question for the opinion of the Court ;

(c) make the award conditional or in the alternative ;

(d) correct in an award any clerical mistake or error arising from any accidental slip or omission ;

(e) administer to any party to the arbitration such interrogatories as may, in the opinion of the arbitrators or umpire, be necessary.

14. Award to be signed and filed.

(1) When the arbitrators or umpire have made their award, they shall sign it and shall give notice in writing to the parties of the making and signing thereof and of the amount of fees and charges payable in respect of the arbitration and award.

(2) The arbitrators or umpire shall, at the request of any party to the arbitration agreement or any person claiming under such party or if so directed by the Court and upon payment of the fees and charges due in respect of the arbitration and award and of the costs and charges of filing the award, cause the award or a signed copy of it, together with any depositions and documents which may have been taken and proved before them, to be filed in Court, and the Court shall thereupon give notice to the parties of the filing of the award.

(3) Where the arbitrators or umpire state a special case under clause (b) of section 13, the Court, after giving notice to the parties and hearing them, shall pronounce its opinion thereon and such opinion shall be added to, and shall form part of, the award.

15. Power of Court to modify award.

The Court may by order modify or correct an award—

(a) Where it appears that a part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration and such part can be separated from the other part and does not affect the decision on the matter referred ; or

(b) where the award is imperfect in form, or contains any obvious error which can be amended without affecting such decision ; or

(c) where the award contains a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission.

16. Power to remit award.

(1) The Court may from time to time remit the award or any matter referred to arbitration to the arbitrators or umpire for reconsideration upon such terms as it thinks fit—

(a) where the award has left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration, or where it determines any matter not referred to arbitration and such matter cannot be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred; or

(b) where the award is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution; or

(c) where an objection to the legality of the award is apparent upon the face of it.

(2) Where an award is remitted under sub-section (1) the Court shall fix the time within which the arbitrator or umpire shall submit his decision to the Court;

Provided that any time so fixed may be extended by subsequent order of the Court.

(3) An award remitted under sub-section (1) shall become void on the failure of the arbitrator or umpire to reconsider it and submit his decision within the time fixed.

17. Judgment in terms of award.

Where the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for reconsideration or to set aside the award, the Court shall, after the time for making an application to set aside the award has expired, or such application having been made, after refusing it, proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award, and upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except on the ground that it is in excess of, or not otherwise in accordance with, the award.

18. Power of Court to pass interim orders.

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 17, at any time after the filing of the award, whether notice of the filing has been served or not, upon being satisfied by affidavit or otherwise that a party has taken or is about to take steps to defeat, delay or obstruct the execution of any decree that may be passed upon the award, or that speedy execution of the award is just and necessary, the Court may pass such interim orders as it deems necessary.

(2) Any person against whom such interim orders have been passed may show cause against such orders and the Court, after hearing the parties, may pass such further orders as it deems necessary and just.

19. Power to supersede arbitration when award becomes void or is set aside.

Where an award has become void under sub-section (3) of section 16 or has been set aside, the Court may by order supersede the reference and shall thereupon order that the arbitration agreement shall cease to have effect with respect to the difference referred.

CHAPTER III.

ARBITRATION WITH INTERVENTION OF A COURT WHERE THERE IS NO SUIT PENDING.

20. Application to file in Court arbitration agreement.

(1) Where any persons have entered into an arbitration agreement before the institution of any suit with respect to the subject-matter of the agreement or any part of it, and where a difference has arisen to which the agreement applies they or any of them instead of proceeding under Chapter II, may apply to a Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates, that the agreement be filed in Court.

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs and the remainder as defendant or defendants, if the application has been presented by all the parties, or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

(3) On such application being made, the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to all parties to the agreement other than the applicants, requiring them to show cause within the time specified in the notice why the agreement should not be filed.

(4) Where no sufficient cause is shown, the Court shall order the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed by the parties, whether in the agreement or otherwise, or, where the parties cannot agree upon an arbitrator, to an arbitrator appointed by the Court.

(5) Thereafter the arbitration shall proceed in accordance with, and shall be governed by, the other provisions of this Act so far as they can be made applicable.

CHAPTER IV

ARBITRATION IN SUITS.

21. Parties to suit may apply for order of reference.

Where in any suit all the parties interested agree that any matter in difference between them in the suit shall be referred to arbitration, they may at any time before judgment is pronounced apply in writing to the Court for an order of reference.

22. Appointment of arbitrator.

The arbitrator shall be appointed in such manner as may be agreed upon between the parties.

23. Order of reference.

(1) The Court shall, by order, refer to the arbitrator the matter in difference which he is required to determine, and shall in the order specify such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award.

(2) Where a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court shall not, save in the manner and to the extent provided in this Act, deal with such matter in the suit.

24. Reference to arbitration by some of the parties.

Where some only of the parties to a suit apply to have the matters in difference between them referred to arbitration in accordance with, and in the manner provided by, section 21, the Court may, if it thinks fit, so refer such matters to arbitration (provided that the same can be separated from the rest of the subject-matter of the suit) in the manner provided in that section, but the suit shall continue so far as it relates to the parties who have not joined in the said application and to matters not contained in the said reference as if no such application had been made, and an award made in pursuance of such a reference shall be binding only on the parties who have joined in the application.

25. Provisions applicable to arbitrations under this Chapter.

The provisions of the other Chapters shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply, to arbitrations under this Chapter.

Provided that the Court may, in any of the circumstances mentioned in sections 8, 10, 11 and 12 instead of filling up the vacancies or making the appointments, make an order superseding the arbitration and proceed with the suit, and where the Court makes an order superseding the arbitration under section 19, it shall proceed with the suit.

CHAPTER V.

GENERAL.

26. Application of Chapter.

Save as otherwise provided in this Act, the provisions of this Chapter shall apply to all arbitrations.

27. Power of arbitrators to make an interim award.

(1) Unless a different intention appears in the arbitration agreement, the arbitrators or umpire may, if they think fit, make an interim award.

(2) All references in this Act to an award shall include references to an interim award made under sub-section (1).

28. Power to Court only to enlarge time for making award.

(1) The Court may, if it thinks fit, whether the time for making the award has expired or not and whether the award has been made or not, enlarge from time to time the time for making the award.

(2) Any provision in an arbitration agreement whereby the arbitrators or umpire may, except, with the consent of all the parties to the agreement, enlarge the time for making the award, shall be void and of no effect.

29. Interest on awards.

Where and in so far as an award is for the payment of money the Court may in the decree order interest, from the date of the decree at such rate as the Court deems reasonable, to be paid on the principal sum as adjudged by the award and confirmed by the decree.

30. Grounds for setting aside award.

An award shall not be set aside except on one or more of the following grounds, namely:

- (a) that an arbitrator or umpire has misconducted himself or the proceedings;
- (b) that an award has been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration or after arbitration proceedings have become invalid under section 35;
- (c) that an award has been improperly procured or is otherwise invalid.

31. Jurisdiction.

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, an award may be filed in any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the reference relates.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force and save as otherwise provided in this Act, all questions regarding the validity, effect or existence of an award or an arbitration agreement between the parties to the agreement or persons claiming under them shall be decided by the Court in which the award under the agreement has been, or may be filed, and by no other Court.

(3) All applications regarding the conduct of arbitration proceedings or otherwise arising out of such proceedings shall be made to the Court where the award has been, or may be, filed, and to no other Court.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained elsewhere in this Act or in any other law for the time being in force, where in any reference any application under this Act has been made in a Court competent to entertain it, that Court alone shall have jurisdiction over the arbitration proceedings and all subsequent applications arising out of that reference and the arbitration proceedings shall be made in that Court and in no other Court.

32. Bar to suits contesting arbitration agreement or award.

Notwithstanding any law for the time being in force, no suit shall lie on any ground whatsoever for a decision upon the existence, effect or validity of an arbitration agreement or award, nor shall any arbitration agreement or award be set aside, amended, modified or in any way affected otherwise than as provided in this Act.

33. Arbitration agreement of award to be contested by application.

Any party to an arbitration agreement or any person claiming under him desiring to challenge the existence or validity of an arbitration agreement or an award or to have the effect of either determined shall apply to the Court and the Court shall decide the question on affidavits:

Provided that where the Court deems it just and expedient, it may set down the application for hearing on other evidence also, and it may pass such orders for discovery and particulars as it may do in a suit.

34. Power to stay legal proceedings where there is an arbitration agreement.

Where any party to an arbitration agreement or any person claiming under him commences any legal proceedings against any other party to the agreement or any person claiming under him in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to the judicial authority before which the proceedings are pending to stay the proceedings; and if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the arbitration agreement and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced, and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, such authority may make an order staying the proceedings.

35. Effect of legal proceedings on arbitration.

(1) No reference nor award shall be rendered invalid by reason only of the commencement of legal proceedings upon the subject-matter of the reference, but when legal proceedings upon the whole of the subject-matter of the reference have been commenced between all the parties to the reference and a notice thereof has been given to the arbitrators or umpire, all further proceedings in a pending reference shall, unless a stay of proceedings is granted under section 34, be invalid.

(2) In this section the expression "parties to the reference" includes any persons claiming under any of the parties and litigating under the same title.

36. Power of Court where arbitration agreement is ordered not to apply to a particular difference, to order that a provision making an award a condition precedent to an action shall not apply to such difference.

Where it is provided (whether in the arbitration agreement or otherwise) that an award under an arbitration agreement shall be a condition precedent to the bringing of an action with respect to any matter to which the agreement applies, the Court, if it orders (whether under this Act or any other law) that the agreement shall cease to have effect as regards any particular difference, may further order that the said provision shall also cease to have effect as regards that difference.

37. Limitations.

(1) All the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to arbitrations as they apply to proceedings in Court.

(2) Notwithstanding any term in an arbitration agreement to the effect that no cause of action shall accrue in respect of any matter required by the agreement to be referred until an award is made under the agreement, a cause of action shall, for the purpose of limitation, be deemed to have accrued in respect of any such matter at the time when it would have accrued but for that term in the agreement.

(3) For the purposes of this section and of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, an arbitration shall be deemed to be commenced when one party to the arbitration agreement serves on the other parties thereto a notice requiring the appointment of an arbitrator, or where the arbitration agreement provides that the reference shall be to a person named or designated in the agreement, requiring that the difference be submitted to the person so named or designated.

(4) Where the terms of an agreement to refer future differences to arbitration provide that any claims to which the agreement applies shall be barred unless notice to appoint an arbitrator is given or an arbitrator is appointed or some other step to commence arbitration proceedings is taken within a time fixed by the agreement, and a difference arises to which the agreement applies, the Court, if it is of opinion that in the circumstances of the case undue hardship would otherwise be caused, and notwithstanding that the time so fixed has expired, may on such terms, if any, as the justice of the case may require, extend the time for such period as it thinks proper.

(5) Where the Court orders that an award be set aside or orders, after the commencement of an arbitration, that the arbitration agreement shall cease to have effect with respect to the difference referred, the period between the commencement of the arbitration and the date of the order of the Court shall be excluded in computing the time prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, for the commencement of the proceedings (including arbitration) with respect to the difference referred.

Statement Leading to Discovery.

As a result of the Full Bench ruling of the Lahore High Court (cf. our note in April issue on p. 25 Journal section) holding that any statement by the accused before a Police Officer, even if leading to a discovery is inadmissible, the Punjab Government introduced a Bill in the Legislature to amend the Criminal Procedure Code, in order to nullify the effects of the ruling aforesaid and maintain the status quo. However one may sympathise with the Government's point of view, one cannot but feel that the action of the Government is hasty and not well thought out. We are fully aware of the difficulties that the ruling will entail upon the Police investigation. Their work is already handicapped by rigours of law relating to confessions and their admissibility. But it must be admitted that in spite of these handicaps and safeguards against involuntary confessions, we so often read of strictures that are passed by Courts, against the method of investigation. The law was taking its own course. The Courts always interpreted the law in favour of the accused. The investigating authorities themselves are to be blamed for this. The present ruling of the Lahore High Court is a culminating point in that process of purging the Police methods of the "third degree" method so often employed by them. There are instances where Police have tried to hoist any discovery made by them independently of the statement of the accused, upon the accused. In such cases, it is very difficult, though not impossible for the accused to rebut the presumption arising out of such discovery. Now the Court had come to his rescue. But unfortunately, the executive, with all its good intention, is undoing the wholesome effect of the ruling. We think, the better course for it to adopt would have been, as suggested by our local contemporary "The Tribune" to refer the matter to a committee of High Court Judges. But now since the Bill has been referred to the Subjects Committee, we respectfully suggest that it should take advice of the High Court itself. It would not be difficult for the High Court to suggest safeguards while admitting the statement to the Police, leading to discovery, like those already on the statute book, insuring that the confessions are made voluntarily.

Enlargement of the Jurisdiction of the Federal Court.

We welcome the move of the Govt. of India to enlarge and extend the powers and the jurisdiction of the Federal Court to civil matters. As the matters now stand the present jurisdiction of the Federal Court is confined to matters involving the interpretation of the Constitution Act. Ever since 1920 there has been a very strong movement in the Country for the establishment of a Supreme Court. But we find that some of the public men and our contemporaries have criticised the move. But for our own part we strongly feel the necessity and desirability for such a Court. Supreme Court is as a matter of fact an essential part of the Constitution. We may here refer to that excellent article contributed by Sir Dr. H. S. Gour, to the All India Reporter in 1928. Therein the learned jurist has conclusively shown the urgent need for such a Court. The main objections to the extension of the powers are that it shall be difficult to find men free from political and religious bias to serve on the Bench. To this our answer is that the majority of the members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are and were the retired Judges of the Indian High Courts. India might lag behind in other matters but in matters intellectual it can stand any test. India has produced men, who could have adorned any Bench as a Judge. The other argument is that the establishment of the Supreme Court shall take away that visible link between the Crown and the subject. We do not think that any weight would be attached to this argument based as it is on sentimental grounds. Moreover, we are not in favour of abolishing the right of appeal to the Privy Council from the decisions of the Federal Court, but concurrent jurisdiction of the Federal Court at the option of the parties should be avoided. Unlike the Privy Council, the new Supreme Court shall be responsive to the growth of legal ideas and the social advances of the Indian Society. The prohibitive costs, delay and other inconveniences, in the matter of appeals before the Privy Council, are hindrances, and by the establishment of the Supreme Court, an ordinary litigant shall be able to get judgment of the Highest Tribunal of the Country. Now that India is promised a Dominion Status of the statute of West Minister variety, such a Court is indispensable from various points of view.

Chief Court for Sind

Something is better than nothing. Nearly 15 years ago, the Civil Justice Committee recommended the establishment of a Chief Court for Sind. The people however, wanted a full fledged High Court. Their desire was natural. The establishment of a High Court was all the more necessary, after the separation of the Province from the Presidency of Bombay. The recommendation of the Committee had remained, for various reasons on paper only. At last, after much agitation and many deputations, Sind got on April 15, a Chief Court. It was indeed a Red Letter Day in the history of the Province. The inauguration ceremony was performed with all the appropriate formalities. Though the establishment of the Chief Court does not remove the want of the people, its constitution which follows closely the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court will go a great way to meet the popular demand. We have no doubt that the new Court will carry on the traditions of justice and equity, for which the British justice is so famous.

Mukhtears and their position in the Legal Profession.

Fourth session of all Bengal and Assam Mukhtears' Conference was held recently at Alipore under the Presidency of Mr. Amarendra Nath Ghosh. Pointed reference was made by both the learned President and the Chairman of the Reception Committee in their addresses, to the anomalous position in which the Mukhtears stand. They are now included in the class of Pleaders. In Civil and Revenue Law they must get 60 per cent. marks to get through the examination. Thus from the academical point of view their status is in no way inferior to that of the Pleaders. But still, we find that whereas a Mukhtear is allowed to represent an accused before the Sessions, he is debarred from doing so before the Presidency Magistrate. We do not know why this anomaly should now be continued unless of course there are other reasons known alone to the authorities, to make this distinction.

Similarly, even after passing the examination in Civil and Revenue Laws with such a high percentage as 60 per cent, they are not entitled to appear in cases involving the administration of such laws. In cases involving criminal misappropriation even to the extent of lacs, he is entitled to prosecute or defend in Criminal Courts but in Civil Courts he is not entitled to appear even in simple ex parte suits involving a few rupees. There seems to us to be no justification for this handicap imposed upon them. The sooner this anomaly is ended the better it is for all concerned.

38. Disputes as to arbitrator's remuneration or costs.

(1) If in any case an arbitrator or umpire refuses to deliver his award except on payment of the fees demanded by him, the Court may, on an application in this behalf, order that the arbitrator or umpire shall deliver the award to the applicant on payment into Court by the applicant of the fees demanded, and shall, after such inquiry, if any, as it thinks fit, further order that out of the money so paid into Court there shall be paid to the arbitrator or umpire by way of fees such sum as the Court may consider reasonable and that the balance of the money, if any, shall be refunded to the applicant.

(2) An application under sub-section (1) may be made by any party to the reference unless the fees demanded have been fixed by written agreement between him and the arbitrator or umpire, and the arbitrator or umpire shall be entitled to appear and be heard on any such application.

(3) The Court may make such orders as it thinks fit respecting the costs of an arbitration where any question arises respecting such costs and the award contains no sufficient provision concerning them.

CHAPTER VI.

APPEALS.

39. Appealable orders.

(1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders passed under this Act (and from no others) to the Court authorised by law to hear appeals from original decrees of the Court passing the order:—

An order—

- (i) superseding an arbitration;
- (ii) on an award stated in the form of a special case;

167—J. 6

- (iii) modifying or correcting an award;
- (iv) filing or refusing to file an arbitration agreement;
- (v) staying or refusing to stay legal proceedings where there is an arbitration agreement;
- (vi) setting aside or refusing to set aside an award;

Provided that the provisions of this section shall not apply to any order passed by a Small Cause Court.

(2) No second appeal shall lie from an order passed in appeal under this section, but nothing in this section shall affect or take away any right to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

CHAPTER VII.

MISCELLANEOUS.

40. Small Cause Court not to have jurisdiction over arbitrations save arbitrations in suits before it.

A Small Cause Court shall have no jurisdiction over any arbitration proceedings or over any application arising thereout save on application made under section 21.

41. Procedure and powers of Court.

Subject to the provisions of this Act and of rules made thereunder—

(a) the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall apply to all proceedings before the Court, and to all appeals, under this Act, and

(b) the Court shall have, for the purpose of, and in relation to, arbitration proceedings, the same power of making orders in respect of any of the matters set out in the Second Schedule as it has for the purpose of, and in relation to, any proceedings before the Court:

Provided that nothing in cl. (b) shall be taken to prejudice any power which may be vested in an arbitrator or umpire for making orders with respect to any of such matters.

42. Service of notice by party or arbitrator.

Any notice required by this Act to be served otherwise than through the Court by a party to an arbitration agreement or by an arbitrator or umpire shall be served in the manner provided in the arbitration agreement, or if there is no such provision, either—

- (a) by delivering it to the person on whom it is to be served, or
- (b) by sending it by post in a letter addressed to that person at his usual or last known place of abode or business in British India and registered under Chapter VI of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898.

43. Power of Court to issue processes for appearance before arbitrator.

(1) The Court shall issue the same processes to the parties and witnesses whom the arbitrator or umpire desires to examine as the Court may issue in suits tried before it.

(2) Persons failing to attend in accordance with such process, or making any other default, or refusing to give their evidence, or guilty of any contempt to the arbitrator or umpire during the investigation of the reference, shall be subject to the like disadvantages, penalties and punishments by order of the Court on the representation of the arbitrator or umpire as they would incur for the like offences in suits tried before the Court.

(3) In this section the expression "processes" includes summonses and commissions for the examination of witnesses and summonses to produce documents.

44. Power to High Court to make rules.

The High Court may make rules consistent with this Act as to:—

- (a) the filing of awards and all proceedings consequent thereon or incidental thereto;
- (b) the filing and hearing of special cases and all proceedings consequent thereon or incidental thereto;
- (c) the staying of any suit or proceeding in contravention of an arbitration agreement;
- (d) the forms to be used for the purposes of this Act;

(e) generally, all proceedings in Court under this Act.

45. Crown to be bound.

The provisions of this Act shall be binding on the Crown.

46. Application of Act to statutory arbitrations.

The provisions of this Act, except subsection (1) of section 6 and sections 7, 12 and 37, shall apply to every arbitration under any other enactment for the time being in force, as if the arbitration were pursuant to an arbitration agreement and as if that other enactment were an arbitration agreement, except in so far as this Act is inconsistent with that other enactment or with any rules made thereunder.

47. Act to apply to all arbitrations.

Subject to the provisions of section 46, and save in so far as is otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, the provisions of this Act shall apply to all arbitrations and to all proceedings thereunder:

Provided that an arbitration award otherwise obtained may with the consent of all the parties interested be taken into consideration as a compromise or adjustment of a suit by any Court before which the suit is pending.

48. Saving for pending references.

The provisions of this Act shall not apply to any reference pending at the commencement of this Act, to which the law in force immediately before the commencement of this Act shall, notwithstanding any repeal effected by this Act, continue to apply.

49. Repeals and amendments.

(1) The enactments specified in the Third Schedule are hereby repealed to the extent mentioned in the fourth column thereof.

(2) The enactments specified in the Fourth Schedule are hereby amended to the extent and in the manner mentioned in the fourth column thereof.

THE FIRST SCHEDULE.

(See section 3.)

IMPLIED CONDITIONS OF ARBITRATION AGREEMENTS.

1. Unless otherwise expressly provided, the reference shall be to a sole arbitrator.
2. If the reference is to an even number of arbitrators, the arbitrators shall appoint an umpire not later than one month from the latest date of their respective appointments.

3. The arbitrators shall make their award within four months after entering on the reference or after having been called upon to act by notice in writing from any party to the arbitration agreement or within such extended time as the Court may allow.

4. If the arbitrators have allowed their time to expire without making an award or have delivered to any party to the arbitration agreement or to the umpire a notice in writing stating that they cannot agree, the umpire shall forthwith enter on the reference in lieu of the arbitrators.

5. The umpire shall make his award within two months of entering on the reference or within such extended time as the Court may allow.

6. The parties to the reference and all persons claiming under them shall, subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, submit to be examined by the arbitrators or umpire on oath or affirmation in relation to the matters in difference and shall, subject as aforesaid, produce before the arbitrators or umpire all books, deeds, papers, accounts, writings and documents within their possession or power respectively, which may be required or called for, and do all other things which, during the proceedings on the reference, the arbitrators or umpire may require.

7. The award shall be final and binding on the parties and persons claiming under them respectively.

8. The costs of the reference and award shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators or umpire who may direct to, and by whom, and in what manner, such costs or any part thereof shall be paid, and may tax or settle the amount of costs to be so paid or any part thereof and may award costs to be paid as between legal practitioner and client.

(a) in relation to a business carried on by a body corporate (other than a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein), eight per cent. per annum;

(b) in relation to any other business, ten per cent. per annum;

Provided that in relation to any decrease of capital the statutory percentage shall be in all cases six per cent.:

Provided further that where the business was commenced on or after the 1st day of July, 1938, the foregoing percentages shall be increased from eight, ten and six per cent. to ten, twelve and eight per cent. respectively;

(22) "written down value" has the meaning assigned to that expression in sub-section (5) of section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

3. Excess profits tax authorities.

(1) There shall be the following classes of excess profits tax authorities for the purposes of this Act, namely:—

(a) the Central Board of Revenue;

(b) Commissioners of Excess Profits Tax;

(c) Assistant Commissioners of Excess Profits Tax, who may be either Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Excess Profits Tax or Inspecting Commissioners of Excess Profits Tax;

(d) Excess Profit Tax Officers;

(e) Boards of Referees.

(2) Every Commissioner of Excess Profits Tax, Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Excess Profits Tax, Inspecting Assistant Commissioner of Excess Profits Tax and Excess Profits Tax Officer shall be a person who is exercising the functions of Commissioner of Income-tax, Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, Inspecting Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax and Income-tax Officer, respectively, under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

(3) The Central Board of Revenue shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), appoint such persons as Commissioners of Excess Profits Tax, Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Excess Profits Tax, Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Excess Profits Tax and Excess Profits Tax Officers as it thinks fit and such persons shall perform their functions in respect of such cases as the Central Board of Revenue may assign to them:

Provided that such directions shall be made entirely at the discretion of the Central Board of Revenue, and, in particular, it shall be competent for that Board to assign a case or class of cases to an officer who is not exercising in respect of that case or class of cases the corresponding functions in relation to the charge of income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

(4) All officers and persons employed in the execution of this Act shall observe and follow the orders, instructions and directions of the Central Board of Revenue :

Provided that nothing in this sub-section applies to a Board of Referees :

Provided further that no such orders, instructions or directions shall be given so as to interfere with the discretion of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in the exercise of his appellate functions.

(5) A Board of Referees shall consist of not less than three and not more than five persons, of whom not less than one-half shall be non-officials having business-experience, and one shall be a judicial officer who has exercised the powers of a District Judge or who possesses such qualifications as are normally required for appointment to the post of District Judge, and who has held judicial office for a period of not less than ten years.

(6) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (5), the Central Government may make rules regulating the formation, composition and procedure of Board of Referees.

4. Charge of tax.

Subject to the provisions of this Act, there shall, in respect of any business to which this Act applies, be charged, levied and paid on the amount by which the profits during any chargeable accounting period exceed the standard profits a tax (in this Act referred to as "excess profits tax") which shall, in respect of any chargeable accounting period ending on or before the 31st day of March, 1941, be equal to fifty per cent. of that excess and shall, in respect of any chargeable accounting period beginning after that date, be equal to such percentage of that excess as may be fixed by the annual Finance Act :

Provided that any profits which are, under the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 4 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, exempt from income-tax, and all profits from any business of life insurance shall be totally exempt from excess profits tax under this Act.

5. Application of Act.

This Act shall apply to every business of which any part of the profits made during the chargeable accounting period is chargeable to income-tax by virtue of the provisions of sub-clause (i) or sub-clause (ii) of clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 4 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or of clause (c) of that sub-section :

Provided that this Act shall not apply to any business the whole of the profits of which accrue or arise without British India where such business is carried on by or on behalf of a person who is resident but not ordinarily resident in British India unless the business is controlled in India :

Provided further that where the profits of a part only of a business carried on by a person who is not resident in British India or not ordinarily so resident accrue or arise in British India or are deemed under the Indian Income tax Act, 1922, so to accrue or arise, then, except where the business being the business of a person who is resident but not ordinarily resident in British India is controlled in India, this Act shall apply only to such part of the business, and such part shall for all the purposes of this Act be deemed to be a separate business.

6. Standard profits.

(1) For the purposes of this Act, the standard profits of a business in relation to any chargeable accounting period shall, subject to the provisions of sub-sections (3) and (4), be an amount bearing to the profits of the business during the standard period, if in respect of that business a standard period is available, the same proportion as the chargeable accounting period bears to the standard period.

Provided that if the average amount of capital employed in the business during such chargeable accounting period is greater or less than the average amount of capital employed during the standard period, such amount shall be increased or decreased, as the case may be, by an amount calculated by applying the statutory percentage to the amount of such increase or decrease :

Provided further that in the case of a business which was commenced on or after the 31st day of March, 1936, the standard profits shall, at the option of the person carrying on the business, be an amount calculated by applying the statutory percentage to the average amount of capital employed in the business during such chargeable accounting period.

(2) For the purposes of this section the standard period shall, at the option of the person carrying on the business, be—

- (a) the "previous year" as determined under section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the purpose of the income tax assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1937, or the previous year as so determined for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1938; or
- (b) the "previous years year" as so determined for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1937, and that for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1939; or
- (c) the "previous year" as so determined for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1938, and that for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1939; or
- (d) the "previous year" as so determined for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1939, and that for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940:

Provided that in no case shall any period of less than nine months be taken as a standard period.

(3) If, within the period specified in the notice issued under sub-section (1) of section 13, the person carrying on the business makes an application to the Excess Profits Tax Officer in this behalf, the Excess Profits Tax Officer shall refer the application to the Board of Referees, and if the Board is satisfied that during the standard period the profits of the business were less than might at the beginning of that period have been reasonably expected, it may direct that the standard profits shall be computed as if the profits during the standard period were such greater amount as it thinks just:

Provided that such amount shall not exceed the statutory percentage of the average amount of the capital employed in the business unless the Board is satisfied that owing to some specific cause peculiar to the business it is just that a greater amount should be allowed.

(4) The standard profits shall be taken to be rupees thirty-six thousand in any case in which the standard profits computed in accordance with sub-section (1) are less than this sum:

Provided that if the chargeable accounting period is greater or less than one year the sum of rupees thirty-six thousand shall for the purpose of this sub-section be increased or decreased proportionately.

(5) where the standard period includes any period prior to the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935, during which Burma was part of British India, there shall, in computing the standard profits of a business under this section, be excluded from the profits of the business during the standard period so much of such profits as arose or accrued or were received in Burma unless such profits are also included in the profits of the business during the chargeable accounting period.

7. Relief on occurrence of deficiency of profits.

Where a deficiency of profits occurs in any chargeable accounting period in any business, the profits of the business chargeable with excess profits tax shall be deemed to be reduced and relief shall be granted in accordance with the following provisions:—

- (a) the aggregate amount of the profits so chargeable for the previous chargeable accounting periods shall be deemed to be reduced by the amount of the deficiency of profits and the amount of excess profits tax payable in respect thereof shall be deemed to be reduced accordingly and the relief necessary to give effect to the reduction shall be given by repayment or otherwise:
- (b) where the amount of the deficiency of profits exceeds the aggregate amount of the profits so chargeable for the previous chargeable accounting periods, or where there is no previous chargeable accounting period, the balance of the deficiency of profits or the whole of the deficiency, as the case may be, shall be applied in reducing any profits so chargeable for the next subsequent chargeable accounting period, and if and so far as it exceeds the amount of those profits, any profits so chargeable for the next subsequent chargeable accounting period and so on.

8. Successions and amalgamations.

(1) As from the date of any change in the persons carrying on a business, the business shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be deemed for all the purposes of this Act except for the purposes of determining the amount of the statutory percentage to have been discontinued, and a new business to have been commenced.

(2) Where the change took place before the 1st day of September, 1939, and consisted in the death or retirement of a partner, or the taking in of a partner, the persons carrying on the business after the change may, by notice given in writing before the prescribed date to the Excess Profits Tax Officer, elect that, for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits, the business shall not be deemed to have been discontinued.

(3) A business shall not, for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits, be deemed to be discontinued by reason of any change occurring on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, in the persons carrying it on, and the standard profits of the business in relation to any chargeable accounting period shall be computed accordingly, and, in particular, in computing the capital employed in the business after the change, no regard shall be had to any consideration given in respect of the transfer of the business or any of the assets thereof on the occasion of the change.

(4) Where, on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, two or more businesses are amalgamated, the resulting business shall be treated for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits as if—

(a) it had been in existence throughout the period during which there were in existence any of the former businesses;

(b) any profits made or losses incurred or capital employed in any of those former businesses had been made, incurred or employed in the resulting business; and

(c) any assets of any of those former businesses had become assets of the resulting business when they became assets of the former business; and, in particular, in computing the capital employed in the resulting business, no regard shall be had to any consideration given in respect of the transfer of any of those former businesses or any of the assets thereof on the occasion of the amalgamation.

(5) Where, on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, part of a business is transferred as a going concern by the person theretofore carrying it on to another person, the part transferred and the part not transferred shall each be deemed for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits to be a continuation of the original business, and the said provisions, including the provisions of this section relating to amalgamations, shall apply accordingly, subject to any necessary modifications.

Provided that, for the purposes aforesaid, such apportionments shall be made of the profits made, and losses incurred, and the capital employed, in the original business, and of any assets of the original business as may appear to the Excess Profits Tax Officer, or on appeal in the prescribed time and manner to the Board of Referees, to that Board, to be just.

(6) Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing provisions of this section, where a business was carried on immediately before the 1st day of April, 1936, and that business, or the main part of that business, was transferred after the said day and before the 1st day of September, 1939, by the person carrying it on to another person, the Excess Profits Tax Officer, if he is satisfied that the business carried on after the transference was not substantially different from the business or part transferred, shall, on the application of the person carrying on the business after the transference, treat that person, for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits, as if he had carried on the transferred business or part of the business as from the date of the commencement of that business, subject, however, to such modifications (including modifications as respects the computation of capital) as he may consider just.

(7) Where, on or after the 1st day of September 1939, a partner in a firm carrying on a business to which this Act applies dies, then notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) any deficiency of profits in respect of any chargeable accounting period ending on or before the date of his death shall, if it has not been fully applied in reducing the profits of any chargeable accounting period under section 7, be carried forward and applied in reducing any profits from the same business carried on by the surviving partner or partners in the first chargeable accounting period after the death of the partner, and if and so far as it exceeds the amount of those profits, in reducing any profits from such business in the next subsequent chargeable accounting period and so on.

9. Inter connected companies.

(1) Where any interest, annuity or other annual payment, or any royalty or rent, is paid by one company to another company, and one of those companies is a subsidiary of the other, or both are subsidiaries of a third company, the capital, profits and losses of both companies shall be computed for the purposes of this Act as if—

- (a) the interest, annuity, annual payment, royalty or rent were not payable;
- (b) any debt in respect of which any such interest is payable did not exist; and
- (c) any asset in respect of which any such royalty or rent is payable were the property of the company paying the royalty or the rent.

(2) Where

- (a) a company (hereinafter referred to as "the principal company") is resident in British India and is not a subsidiary of any other company resident in British India; and
- (b) during the whole or any part of any chargeable accounting period of the principal company, another company, whether or not resident or carrying on business within British India (hereinafter referred to as "the subsidiary company") is a subsidiary of the principal company, the following provisions of this section shall, subject to the provisions of section 5, have effect in relation to that chargeable accounting period.

(3) If the subsidiary company is a subsidiary of the principal company throughout the chargeable accounting period, such capital employed in, and profits or losses arising from, the business of the subsidiary company as is employed or arise in—

- (i) the chargeable accounting period; or
- (ii) any year constituting or comprised in the standard period of the principal company, shall be treated for the purposes of this Act as if it or they were capital employed in or as the case may be profits or losses arising from, the business of the principal company.

(4) If the subsidiary company is a subsidiary of the principal company during part only of the chargeable accounting period, the excess or deficiency of profits of the subsidiary company for that part of that period shall be treated as increasing or, as the case may be, decreasing the excess or deficiency of profits of the principal company for the whole period and shall not be deemed to be an excess or deficiency of profits of the subsidiary company.

In this sub-section, the expressions "excess" and "deficiency" mean, in relation to profits, an excess or deficiency in relation to the standard profits of the subsidiary company or, as the case may be, the principal company.

(5) In any case to which sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) applies, such alteration, if any, of the periods which would otherwise be the chargeable accounting periods of the subsidiary company shall be made as the Central Board of Revenue may direct.

(6) For the purposes of this section, a company shall be deemed to be a subsidiary of another company if and so long as not less than nine-tenths of its ordinary share capital is owned by that other company, whether directly or through another company or other companies or partly directly and partly through another company or other companies.

(7) The amount of ordinary share capital of one company owned by a second company through another company or other companies, or partly directly and partly through another company or other companies shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of the Third Schedule.

(8) In this section and the Third Schedule references to ownership shall be construed as references to beneficial ownership, and the expression "ordinary share capital", in relation to a company, means all the issued share capital (by whatever name called) of the company, other than capital the holders whereof have a right to a dividend at a fixed rate but have no other right to share in the profits of the company.

(9) The principal company shall be entitled to allocate to its subsidiary company or companies the respective proportionate shares of the excess profits tax payable by the whole group.

(10) The excess profits tax payable by virtue of this section by the principal company in respect of the profits of any subsidiary company shall, for the purposes of section 12, be deemed to have been paid by the subsidiary company and not by the principal company.

10. Artificial transactions.

(1) A person shall not for the purpose of reducing any excess profits which are or would be chargeable to excess profits tax enter into a fictitious or artificial transaction, or carry out any fictitious or artificial operation.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section an artificial transaction or operation includes every device of whatever nature adopted for the purpose of presenting the accounts of a business in a misleading form or manner with intent to evade or having the effect of evading any obligation imposed by this Act.

(2) Any such transaction or operation shall be treated as null and void for the purpose of computing the excess profits tax payable under this Act.

(3) If the Excess Profits Tax Officer is satisfied that any person has acted in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (1), he may with the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner direct that such person shall pay, in addition to any excess profits tax for which he is or would, but for such transaction or operation, be liable, a penalty not exceeding the tax evaded or sought to be evaded.

11. Relief in respect of double excess profits taxation

(1) The Central Government may by notification in the official Gazette make provision for the granting of relief in cases where both excess profits tax under this Act and excess profits tax under any law in force in the United Kingdom, in any Indian State, or in any other part of His Majesty's Dominions have been paid upon the profits of any business if it appears to the Central Government that the laws of the United Kingdom or of that Indian State or of that other part of His Majesty's Dominions provide for corresponding relief in respect of excess profits tax charged on profits both in the United Kingdom or in that State or in that part and in British India:

Provided that where under section 19 of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, national defence contribution has been paid in the United Kingdom in lieu of excess profits tax, that portion of the national defence contribution so paid which is equal to the excess profits tax which would otherwise have been payable shall, for the purposes of this sub-section, be deemed to be excess profits tax paid in the United Kingdom.

(2) If any person, who has paid excess profits tax under this Act for any chargeable accounting period in respect of profits arising outside India in a country the laws of which do not provide for any relief in respect of excess profits tax charged in British India, proves that he has paid excess profits tax under the laws of the said country in respect of the same profits, he shall be entitled to the deduction from the excess profits tax payable in British India of a sum equal to one-half thereof or to one-half of the excess profits tax payable in the said country, whichever is the less.

12. Allowance of excess profits tax in computing income for income-tax purposes.

(1) The amount of the excess profits tax payable in respect of a business for any chargeable accounting period diminished by any amount allowable by way of relief under the provisions of section 11, shall, in computing for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax the profits and gains of that business, be allowed to be deducted as an expense incurred in that period.

(2) There shall also be so deducted the amount of any excess profits tax payable under any law in force in a country outside British India on the profits of the business in respect of any chargeable accounting period to the extent that such profits arose in the said country, after diminishing such amount by any amount which is allowable by way of relief by repayment, set off or otherwise under any law in the country where the tax is payable providing for the granting of relief in that country where excess profits tax has also been charged in British India:

Provided that where, under the provisions of this Act relating to deficiencies of profits or under any corresponding law in force in the said country without British India, relief is given by way of repayment from excess profits tax chargeable for any chargeable accounting period previous to that in which the deficiency occurs, the amount of the deduction allowed under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall not be altered, but the amount repayable shall be taken into account in computing the profits and gains of the business for the purposes of income-tax as if it were a profit of the business accruing in the chargeable accounting period in which the deficiency of profits occurs.

13. Issue of notices for assessment.

(1) The Excess Profits Tax Officer may, for the purposes of this Act, require any person whom he believes to be engaged in any business to which this Act applies, or to have been so engaged during any chargeable accounting period, or to be otherwise liable to pay excess profits tax, to furnish within such period, not being less than sixty days from the date of the service of the notice, as may be specified in the notice, a return in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner setting forth (along with such other particulars as may be provided for in the notice) with respect to any chargeable accounting period specified in the notice the profits of the business and the standard profits of the business as computed in accordance with the provisions of section 6 or the amount of deficiency available for relief under section 7:

Provided that the Excess Profits Tax Officer may, in his discretion, extend the date for the delivery of the return.

(2) The Excess Profits Tax Officer may serve on any person, upon whom a notice has been served under sub-section (1), a notice requiring him on a date to be therein specified to produce, or cause to be produced, such accounts or documents as the Excess Profits Tax Officer may require and may from time to time serve further notices in like manner requiring the production of such further accounts or documents or other evidence as he may require:

Provided that the Excess Profits Tax Officer shall not require the production of any accounts relating to a period prior to the "previous year" as determined under section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the purpose of the income-tax assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1937.

14. Assessments.

(1) The Excess Profits Tax Officer shall, by an order in writing after considering such evidence, if any, as he has required under section 13, assess to the best of his judgment the profits liable to excess profits tax and the amount of excess profits tax payable on the basis of such assessment, or if there is a deficiency of profits, the amount of that deficiency and the amount of excess profits tax, if any, repayable and shall furnish a copy of such order to the person on whom the assessment has been made.

(2) Excess profits tax payable in respect of any chargeable accounting period shall be payable by the person carrying on the business in that period.

(3) Where two or more persons were carrying on the business jointly in the chargeable accounting period, the assessment shall be made upon them jointly and, in the case of a partnership, may be made in the partnership name.

(4) Where by virtue of the foregoing provisions an assessment could, but for his death, have been made on any person either solely or jointly with any other person or persons, the assessment may be made on his legal representative either solely or jointly with that other person or persons, as the case may be.

15. Profits escaping assessment.

If, in consequence of definite information which has come into his possession, the Excess Profits Tax Officer discovers that profits of any chargeable accounting period chargeable to excess profits tax have escaped assessment, or have been under-assessed, or have been the subject of excessive relief, he may at any time within five years of the end of the chargeable accounting period in question serve on the person liable to such tax a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under section 13, and may proceed to assess or re-assess the amount of such profits liable to excess profits tax and the provisions of this Act shall, so far as may be, apply as if the notice were a notice issued under that section.

16. Penalties.

If the Excess Profits Tax Officer, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Commissioner, in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that any person has, without reasonable cause, failed to furnish the return required under sub-section (1) of section 13, or to produce or cause to be produced the accounts or documents or other evidence required by the Excess Profits Tax Officer under sub-section (2) of that section, or has concealed particulars of the profits made by or capital employed in the business, or has deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such profits or capital, he may direct that such person shall pay by way of penalty, in addition to the amount of any excess profits tax payable, a sum not exceeding—

(a) where the person has failed to furnish the return required under sub-section (1) of section 13, the amount of the excess profits tax payable; and

(b) in any other case, the amount of excess profits tax which would have been avoided if the return made had been accepted as correct:

Provided that the Excess Profits Tax Officer shall not impose any penalty under this section without the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

17. Appeals.

(1) Any person aggrieved by a decision made in pursuance of section 8, or objecting to the amount of excess profits tax for which he is liable as assessed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer or denying his liability to be assessed under this Act, or objecting to any penalty imposed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer, or to the amount of any deficiency of profits as assessed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer, or to the amount allowed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer by way of relief under any provision of this Act or to any refusal by the Excess Profits Tax Officer to grant relief may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner:

Provided that no appeal shall lie against a determination of the amount of the profits of any standard period where those profits have been determined in accordance with the first proviso to rule 1 of the First Schedule except in respect of adjustments made under the provisions of that Schedule:

Provided further that no appeal shall lie under this section against any apportionment made by the Excess Profits Tax Officer under the proviso to sub-section (5) of section 8 or against any decision of the Board of Referees under sub-section (3) of section 6.

(2) An appeal shall ordinarily be presented within forty-five days of receipt of the notice of demand relating to the assessment or penalty objected to or in the case of an appeal against the assessment of a deficiency of profits, within forty-five days of the receipt of the copy of the order determining the deficiency, or in the case of an appeal against the amount of a relief granted or a refusal to grant relief, within forty-five days of the receipt of the intimation of the order granting or refusing to grant the relief, but the Appellate Assistant Commissioner may admit an appeal after the expiration of that period if he is satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not presenting it within that period.

(3) An appeal shall be in the prescribed form and shall be verified in the prescribed manner.

(4) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall hear and determine the appeal and, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall pass such orders as he thinks fit, and such orders may include an order enhancing the assessment or a penalty:

Provided that an order enhancing an assessment or penalty shall not be made unless the person affected thereby has been given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against such enhancement.

(5) The procedure to be adopted in the hearing and determination of appeals shall be in accordance with the rules made in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue.

18. Appeal to Commissioner against Appellate Assistant Commissioner's orders imposing penalties or enhancing assessments or penalties.

(1) Any person objecting to an order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner imposing on him a penalty under section 16 or enhancing his assessment or enhancing a penalty under section 17 may appeal to the Commissioner within thirty days of the date on which he was served with notice of such order.

(2) In disposing of the appeal the Commissioner may, after giving the appellant an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders thereon as he thinks fit.

(3) On the coming into operation of Part II of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, this section shall cease to have effect.

19. Power of revision.

(1) The Commissioner may of his own motion call for the record of any proceeding under this Act which has been taken by any Excess Profits Tax Officer or Appellate Assistant Commissioner subordinate to him, and on receipt of the record may make such enquiry, or cause such enquiry to be made, and, subject to the provisions of this Act, may pass such orders thereon (including an order enhancing an assessment) as he thinks fit:

Provided that he shall not pass any order prejudicial to a person to whose business this Act applies without hearing him, or giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

(2) On the coming into operation of Part II of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, sub-section (1) shall cease to have effect, but thereafter any Excess Profits Tax Officer or any person in respect of whose business an order under section 14 has been passed who objects to an order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 16 or section 17 may, within the prescribed time and in the prescribed manner, appeal against such order to the Appellate Tribunal constituted under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and that Tribunal shall have all such powers in disposing of the appeal as it has in respect of appeals preferred to it under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

20. Rectification of mistakes.

The Commissioner may, at any time within four years from the date of any order passed whether by himself or by any Appellate Assistant Commissioner or Excess Profits Tax Officer under this Act, rectify any mistake in any evidence recorded during assessment or appellate proceedings, or any mistake apparent from the record and shall within the like period rectify any mistake apparent from the record which has been brought to his notice by a person to whose business this Act applies :

Provided that no such rectification shall be made having the effect of enhancing the liability of any person unless that person has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

21. Application of provisions of Act XI of 1922.

The provisions of sections 4-A, 4-B, 10, 13, 21-B, 29, 36 to 44-C (inclusive), 45 to 48 (inclusive), 49-E, 49-F, 50, 54, 61 to 63 (inclusive), 65 to 67-A (inclusive) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, shall apply with such modifications, if any, as may be prescribed, as if the said provisions were provisions of this Act and referred to excess profits tax instead of to income-tax, and every officer exercising powers under the said provisions in regard to income-tax may exercise the like powers under this Act in regard to excess profits tax in respect of cases assigned to him under sub-section (3) of section 3 as he exercises in relation to income-tax under the said Act :

Provided that references in the said provisions to the assessee shall be construed as references to a person to whose business this Act applies.

22. Income-tax papers to be available for the purposes of this Act.

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, all information contained in any statement or return made or furnished under the provisions of that Act or obtained or collected for the purposes of that Act may be used for the purposes of this Act.

(2) All information contained in any statement or return made or furnished under the provisions of this Act or obtained or collected for the purposes of this Act may be used for the purposes of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

23. Failure to deliver returns or statements.

If any person fails, without reasonable cause or excuse, to furnish in due time any return or statement, or to produce, or cause to be produced, any accounts or documents required to be produced under section 13, he shall on conviction by a Magistrate be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, and with a further fine which may extend to fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues.

24. False statement and declaration.

If a person makes in any return required under section 13 any statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, he shall be punishable on conviction by a Magistrate with simple imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

25. Institution of proceedings and composition of offences.

(1) A person shall not be proceeded against for an offence under section 23 or section 24 except at the instance of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

(2) No prosecution for an offence punishable under section 23 or section 24 or under the Indian Penal Code shall be instituted in respect of the same facts as those in respect of which a penalty has been imposed under this Act.

(3) The Inspecting Assistant Commissioner may, either before or after the institution of proceedings, compound any offence punishable under section 23 or section 24.

26. Power of Central Board of Revenue to grant relief in special cases.

(1) If the Central Board of Revenue is satisfied in the case of any business that special circumstances exist which render it inequitable that the standard profits of the business in relation to any chargeable accounting period should be computed in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 6, and that no relief or insufficient relief has been granted under the provisions of sub-section (3) of that section, the Central Board of Revenue may direct that the standard profits of the business shall be computed to be such greater amount as the Central Board of Revenue thinks just:

Provided that such amount shall not exceed the statutory percentage of the average amount of the capital employed in the business unless the Central Board of Revenue is satisfied that owing to some specific cause peculiar to the business it is just that a greater amount should be allowed and that the relief, if any, afforded by the Board of Referees under sub-section (3) of section 6 is inadequate.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions of sub-section (1) the Central Board of Revenue shall, in considering the making of a direction under that sub-section, have regard to the following circumstances, namely:—

- (a) that the capital employed in a business commenced on or after the 1st day of July, 1938, is so small in relation to the volume of the activities of the business that to compute the standard profits in accordance with the provisions of section 6 would be inequitable, taking into account the normal profits made in similar businesses; that owing to the nature of the business heavy expenditure by way of preliminary expenses or expenses in connection with experimental or development work has been incurred in accounting periods closely preceding the chargeable accounting period and that during the chargeable accounting period such expenditure would normally fall to be written off wholly or partly in the books of the person chargeable to excess profits tax;
 - (c) that the business is of a pioneer nature, that is to say, is concerned with an industrial process or a form of manufacture or production not undertaken in British India before the 1st day of April, 1932, and has not been in existence long enough to have paid income-tax for the previous year as determined for the purpose of the income-tax assessment for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1937.
- (3) If the Central Board of Revenue is satisfied that the computation in accordance with the provisions of Schedule I of the profits of a business during any chargeable accounting period would be inequitable, owing to any of the following circumstances, namely:—
- (a) any postponement or suspension, as a consequence of the present hostilities, of renewals or repairs, or
 - (b) the provision of buildings, plant or machinery which will not be required for the purposes of the business after the termination of the present hostilities, or
 - (c) difficulties in bringing into British India income arising outside British India where the country in which the income accrued prohibits or restricts by its laws the remittance of money to British India, and loss in the remittance to British India of such income because of fluctuations in the rate of exchange between that country and British India;

the Central Board of Revenue may direct that such allowances shall be made in computing the profits of the business during that chargeable accounting period as the Central Board of Revenue thinks just:

Provided that in making such direction the Central Board of Revenue may impose such conditions as it deems appropriate.

27. Power to make rules.

(1) The Central Board of Revenue may, subject to the control of the Central Government, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(a) prescribe the procedure to be followed on appeals, applications for rectification of mistakes, and applications for refunds;

(b) provide for the adaptation to excess profits tax of any of the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, which are made applicable to excess profits tax by section 21; or of any rules made under any such provision;

(c) provide in regard to companies whose business consists wholly or mainly in the dealing in or holding of investments for the granting of exemption or relief from liability to excess profits tax of profits derived from investments in other companies the profits of which have been subjected to excess profits tax in British India;

(d) provide for any matter which by, or under, this Act is to be prescribed.

(3) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall be exercised in like manner as the power to make rules under section 59 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

SCHEDULE I.

[See section 2 (19).]

Rules for the computation of profits for purposes of Excess Profits Tax.

1. The profits of a business during the standard period, or during any chargeable accounting period shall be separately computed, and shall, subject to the provisions of this Schedule, be computed on the principles on which the profits of a business are computed for the purposes of income-tax under section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:

Provided that where the profits during any standard period have already been determined for the purpose of an assessment under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, such profits as so determined shall, subject to the adjustments required by this Schedule, be taken as the profits during that period for the purpose of excess profits tax:

Provided further that where a standard period or chargeable accounting period is not an accounting period, the profits or losses of the business during any accounting periods wholly or partly included within the standard period or chargeable accounting period shall be so computed as aforesaid, and such division and apportionment to specific periods of those profits or losses and such aggregation of those profits and losses, or any apportioned part thereof shall be made as appears necessary to arrive at the profit during the standard period or chargeable accounting period: and any such apportionment shall be made in proportion to the number of months or fractions of months in the respective periods unless the Excess Profits Tax Officer, having regard to any special circumstances, otherwise directs.

2. The profits of a business during the standard period shall be computed on the same basis and in the same manner as the profits of that business are under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as amended by the Indian Income tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, computed for the chargeable accounting period, notwithstanding that the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, may not have been in force in the standard period.

3. (1) The principle of adding the allowance for depreciation for any one period to the allowance for depreciation for any subsequent period and deeming it to be part of the allowance for such subsequent period shall not be followed.

(2) No allowance shall be made for any loss other than a loss sustained in a business to which this Act applies.

(3) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as permitting the application, in computing profits for the purposes of the excess profits tax, of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 24 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

4. (1) Income received from investments shall be included in the profits in the cases and to the extent provided in sub-rules (2) and (4) of this rule and not otherwise.

(2) In the case of the business of a building society, or of a moneylending business, banking business, insurance business, or business consisting wholly or mainly in the dealing in or holding of investments, the profits shall include all income received from investments, whether or not such income is included in the profits charged under section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or is charged under any other section of that Act, or has been subjected to deduction of tax at source or is free of or exempt from income-tax.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-rule (2), where the profits of a subsidiary company are under the provisions of section 9 to be included in the profits of the principal company for the purposes of assessment to excess profits tax, dividends from the subsidiary company out of such profits shall not also be included in the profits of the principal company.

(4) In the case of a business which consists wholly or partly in the letting out of property on hire, the income from the property shall be included in the profits of the business whether or not it has been charged to income-tax under section 9 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or under any other section of that Act.

(5) Where the person carrying on a business is the beneficial owner of any investments, the income from which is by virtue of the provisions of this rule not to be taken into account in computing the profits of the business, and a deduction would, apart from the provisions of this rule, fall to be made in respect of interest on borrowed money, the deduction (if any) to be made in respect of that interest shall be computed as if the principal of the borrowed money were reduced by the value of those investments:

Provided that where the person carrying on the business is not a company, no such reduction shall be deemed to be made in the principal of any borrowed money in respect of any investments unless the investments are mortgaged, charged or pledged as security for the repayment of that money and interest thereon.

5. If at any time after the close of the standard period, any increase in the capital employed in a business has been effected by means of a loan from a bank carrying on a bona fide banking business, or by means of a public issue of debentures secured on the property of the company, the interest on so much of the loan or debentures as has been utilised in effecting the increase in the capital shall not be deducted in computing the profits for the purposes of excess profits tax and, notwithstanding the provisions of rule 2 of Schedule II, that amount of such loan or debentures shall not be deducted in arriving at the amount of the capital employed in the business.

6. No deduction shall be made on account of liability to pay, or payment of, income-tax, super-tax, or excess profits tax.

7. (1) In the case of a business carried on, in any accounting period which constitutes or includes a chargeable accounting period, by a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein,—

(a) if the standard profits of the company are computed by reference to the profits during a standard period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of directors' remuneration in excess of the amount paid for directors' remuneration in respect of the standard period or, if the standard period is longer or shorter than the accounting period, in excess of a sum which bears to the sum paid for directors' remuneration in respect of the standard period the same proportion as the length of the accounting period bears to that of the standard period;

(b) if the standard profits are not computed by reference to the profits during a standard period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of directors' remuneration.

(2) In this rule the expression "directors' remuneration" does not include—

(a) the remuneration of any director who is required to devote substantially the whole of his time to the service of the company in a managerial or technical capacity and is not the beneficial owner of, or able, either directly or through the medium of other companies or by any other indirect means, to control, more than five per cent. of the ordinary share capital of the company, or

(b) the remuneration of any managing agent where such remuneration is included in profits of the managing agent's business for the purposes of excess profits tax.

8. In the case of a business carried on by a company, if the standard profits of the company are computed by reference to the profits during a standard period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of remuneration paid to a managing agent in excess of the amount which would have been payable to that managing agent if the agreement in force in the standard period had been in force in the chargeable accounting period, except where such remuneration is subjected to excess profits tax in the hands of the managing agent.

9. Where the performance of a contract extends beyond the accounting period, there shall (unless the Excess Profits Tax Officer, owing to any special circumstances, otherwise directs) be attributed to the accounting periods such proportion of the entire profits or loss which has resulted, or which it is estimated will result, from the complete performance of the contract as is properly attributable to the accounting period, having regard to the extent to which the contract was performed therein :

Provided that when any such contract has been completed and the profits have been finally ascertained, if the aggregate of the amounts attributed to previous accounting periods exceeds the profit, as finally ascertained, from the complete performance of the contract, an adjustment shall be made to reduce the amounts so attributed to the various chargeable accounting periods to the amount of the profits as finally ascertained.

10. In respect of any building erected on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, which during any chargeable accounting period has ceased to be required for the purposes of the business or has been sold, any amount by which the value of the building at the date when it ceased to be required for the purposes of the business or the price obtained for the building, as the case may be, falls short of the written down value of the building shall be allowed as a deduction in arriving at the profits of that chargeable accounting period.

SCHEDULE II.

[See section 2 (3).]

Rules for computing the average amount of capital.

1. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Schedule, the average amount of the capital employed in a business (so far as it does not consist of money) shall be taken to be—

(a) so far as it consists of assets acquired by purchase on or after the commencement of the business, the price at which those assets were acquired, subject to the deductions hereafter specified ;

(b) so far as it consists of assets being debts due to the person carrying on the business, the nominal amount of those debts, subject to the said deductions ;

(c) so far as it consists of any other assets which have been acquired otherwise than by purchase as aforesaid, the value of the assets when they became assets of the business, subject to the said deductions.

(2) The price or value of any assets other than a debt shall be subject to such deductions for depreciation as are necessary to reduce the asset to its written down value and, in the case of a debt, the nominal amount of the debt shall be subject to any deduction which has been allowed in respect thereof for income-tax purposes.

(3) Where the price of any asset has been satisfied otherwise than in cash, the then value of the consideration actually given for the asset shall be treated as the price at which the asset was acquired.

2. (1) Any borrowed money and debts shall be deducted, and in particular any debt for income-tax or super-tax or for excess profits tax in respect of the business shall be deducted :

Provided that any such debt for income-tax or super-tax or excess profits tax shall, for the purposes of this Schedule, be deemed to have become due—

(a) in the case of income-tax and super-tax, on the last day of the period of time within which the tax is payable under section 45 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922;

(b) in the case of excess profits tax, on the first day after the end of the chargeable accounting period in respect of which the tax is assessable notwithstanding that the excess profits tax may not have been assessed until after that date.

(2) Where any debt for the excess profits tax assessable in respect of any period is to be deducted under this rule, the amount thereof shall not be reduced as the result of any relief to be given in respect of a deficiency of profits occurring in any subsequent period, and the amount of any such relief shall be treated as having become an asset of the business on the first day after the end of the chargeable accounting period in which the deficiency occurred.

3. Any investments the income from which is by virtue of the provisions of the First Schedule not to be taken into account in computing the profits of the business, and any moneys not required for the purposes of the business, shall be left out of account, but where any investments in the beneficial ownership of the person carrying on the business are so left out of account, the sum (if any) to be deducted under the last preceding rule in respect of borrowed money shall be computed as if the principal of the borrowed money were reduced by the value of those investments:

Provided that where the person carrying on the business is not a company, no reduction shall be deemed to be made in the principal of any borrowed money in respect of any investments unless the investments are mortgaged, charged or pledged as security for the repayment of that money and the interest thereon.

4. Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 3, in the case of the business of shipping, to which this Act applies, the sale proceeds of any tonnage sold or the amount of compensation in respect of loss of ships or the amount of accumulation of reserves, whether invested or not, shall be taken into account in computing the average amount of capital employed in such business:

Provided that any income received from investment of such funds shall be included in computing profits for purposes of the excess profits tax.

5. For the purpose of ascertaining the average amount of capital employed in a business during any period, the profits or losses made in that period shall, except so far as the contrary is shown, be deemed—

- (a) to have accrued at an even rate throughout the period; and
- (b) to have resulted, as they accrued, in a corresponding increase, or decrease, as the case may be, in the capital employed in the business.

6. Where, in accordance with the second proviso to section 5 of this Act, this Act is applicable to part only of a business, the capital employed in that part shall be computed separately from any other capital of the person carrying on the business, and all references to capital employed in a business shall be construed as references to capital employed in that part of the business only.

SCHEDULE III.

[See section 9 (7)].

Rules for determining the amount of capital held by a company through other companies.

1. Where, in the case of a number of companies, the first directly owns ordinary share capital of the second and the second directly owns ordinary share capital of the third, then, for the purposes of this Schedule, the first shall be deemed to own ordinary share capital of the third through the second and, if the third directly owns ordinary share capital of a fourth, the first shall be deemed to own ordinary share capital of the fourth through the second and third, and the second shall be deemed to own ordinary share capital of the fourth through the third, and so on.

2. In this Schedule—

- (a) any number of companies of which the first directly owns ordinary share capital of the next and the next directly owns ordinary share capital of the next but one and so on, and, if they are more than three, any three or more of them, are referred to as "a series";
- (b) in any series—
 - (i) that company which owns ordinary share capital of another through the remainder is referred to as "the first owner";
 - (ii) that other company the ordinary share capital of which is so owned is referred to as "the last owned company";
 - (iii) the remainder, if one only, is referred to as an "intermediary" or, if more than one, is referred to as a "chain of intermediaries";
- (c) a company in a series which directly owns ordinary share capital of another company in the series is referred to as an "owner";
- (d) any two companies in a series of which one owns ordinary share capital of the other directly, and not through one or more of the other companies in the series, are referred to as being directly related to one another.

3. Where every owner in a series owns the whole of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related, the first owner shall be deemed to own through the intermediary or chain of intermediaries the whole of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company.

4. Where one of the owners in a series owns a fraction of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related, and every other owner in the series owns the whole of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related, the first owner shall be deemed to own that fraction of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company through the intermediary or chain of intermediaries.

5. Where—

(a) each of two or more of the owners in a series owns a fraction, and every other owner in the series owns the whole, of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related; or

(b) every owner in a series owns a fraction of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related;

the first owner shall be deemed to own through the intermediary or chain of intermediaries such fraction of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company as results from the multiplication of those fractions.

6. Where the first owner in any series owns a fraction of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company in that series through the intermediary or chain of intermediaries in that series, and also owns another fraction or other fractions of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company, either—

(a) directly; or

(b) through any intermediary or intermediaries which is not a member or are not members of that series; or

(c) through a chain or chains of intermediaries of which one or some or all are not members of that series; or

(d) in a case where the series consists of more than three companies, through an intermediary or intermediaries which is a member or are members of the series, or through a chain or chains of intermediaries consisting of some but not all of the companies of which the chain of intermediaries in the series consists;

then, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company owned by the first owner, all those fractions shall be aggregated and the first owner shall be deemed to own the sum of those fractions.

BREAKING DOORS FOR PURPOSE OF EXECUTING

The question whether a police officer charged with the duty of executing a warrant of commitment, is justified in breaking open doors to obtain entry to the premises where the defendant is residing, is sometimes of considerable importance, and as there appears to be no authority directly in point the matter is worth discussion.

"Paley on Summary Convictions" states: "A constable, in the execution of a warrant of commitment, may break open outer as well as inner doors of any house in which the offender is an actual inmate or resident. But he must first signify to those in the house the cause of his coming, and request them to give him admittance. It may be doubted whether the doors of a stranger can be forced upon the mere ground of the offender being within, if the latter be not an actual resident or inmate." Reference is made to Harvey v. Harvey (1884) 26 Ch. Div. 644, and Launock v. Brown (1819) 2 B. and Ald 592; 106 E. R. 482. Any statement in Paley is entitled to respect, and we have no doubt that this is a correct statement of the law, but since many text-books are silent upon the point, and it is often considered to be in doubt, it seems desirable to look into such cases as bear upon it.

In Launock v. Brown, supra, the warrant in question under an old statute authorised entry and search, but Abbot, C. J., dealt with the general question of breaking doors in the execution of criminal process, and laid it down that in misdemeanours entry must first be demanded. It seems implied, therefore, that doors may be broken after such demand.

In Eagleton v. Gutteridge (1843), 8 J.

P. 643; 18 Dig. 275, it was held that in a distress for rent a forcible re-entry by breaking the outer door is justifiable under a warrant of distress where the party executing the warrant has been forcibly turned out of possession. Again, in Bannister v. Hyde and Another (1860), 24 J.P., 230, 18 Dig. 357, a person who was put in possession by a landlord under a distress went out for refreshment, intending to return. In his absence the tenant locked the outer door and refused re-admission, whereupon the man in possession broke open the door of the house and re-entered. It was held that the man in possession was justified in so doing, and that, in going out as he did he had in no way abandoned his distress. In these cases, be it noted, the distress was for rent, and there was no question of any criminal offence or process. It may be confidently argued that where a police officer is attempting to execute a warrant issued by a Court against a person convicted of an offence his powers are not less than those of a man in possession for rent.

The headnote in Harvey v. Harvey, supra reads: "Where a writ of attachment has issued against a party to an action for contempt of court in non-compliance with an order for the delivery over of deeds and documents, the officer charged with the execution of the writ may break open the outer door of the house in order to execute it." Chitty, J., in his judgment dealt with the history of the law on the subject, and drew a distinction between criminal proceedings and proceedings for contempt of Court on the one hand, and civil proceedings concerning individuals on the other. From his observations it would seem that where the public weal requires that process should be executed the powers of an officer to break open doors where admission cannot otherwise be obtained may be considered as established. So far as warrants of commitment issued by Courts of summary jurisdiction are concerned, it is submitted that the public weal requires that penalties should be enforced and warrants executed, and that, therefore, a police officer in possession of a warrant of commitment may, after being refused admission, break open a door for the purpose of executing the warrant.

A warrant of commitment is, in fact, though not in form, also a warrant of apprehension. A warrant of commitment commands the constable to convey the defendant to a prison, and obviously a defendant who is at large cannot be conveyed to prison unless he be first apprehended. Therefore, wherever a constable has authority to break open doors to effect an arrest he must also have such authority for the purpose of executing a warrant of commitment. It would be strange if there were power to break open doors to arrest a person suspected of an offence, but no such authority to arrest a person who had been actually convicted of that offence.

We think, therefore, that doors may be broken for the purpose of executing a warrant of commitment, whether the adjudication be imprisonment without the option of a fine, or whether it be for the enforcement of fine, and that this applies to a conviction for any criminal offence.—J. P.
